THE LATEST NEWS.

Our Correspondent "Viz" Missing—Gen. Trochu's Head-Quarters in Paris—Republicans of Spain Awaiting Their Opportunity—The Bank of Paris and the Spanish Loan.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PARIS, Aug. 19—8 P. M.—Mr. VITZELLI, one of our war correspondents, (whose letters are signed "Viz,") is missing. Great anxiety is felt about his fate. He came to Paris when the foreign correspondents cleared out of Metz a fortnight ago, and returned to the army on the 10th. He has not been heard from since. We have held a council of war of correspondents in relation to the affair of VITZELLI, and judge it wise to wy first to watch the prisoners who arrive from the front to-morrow.

Some curious developments have just been made with which an Englishman of high rank is mixed up. Gold has been spent in great profusion.

GEN. TROCHU'S HEAD-QUARTERS.

I have just heard that Gen. TROCHU, the new military Governor of Paris, has taken up his head-quarters at the Palace of the Elysée.

THE SPANISH REPUBLICANS.

A dispatch from your correspondent at Madrid, dated this morning, states that Gen. PRIM, Señor RIVERO and another member of the Ministry, are again in negotiation with the Republicans. The latter will have nothing to do with them, preferring to abide their chance. If the French Government said but the word, Spain would be Republican to-morrow.

THE SPANISH LOAN AND THE WAR.

The Bank of Paris has announced to the Spanish Government that they will not pay the installment of 125,000,000 of francs contracted for, and which, under the contract, they have a right to refuse in case of war. R.

Trochu as Military Governor of Paris—Confidence in the Appointment—News from the Front—Why the London Times and Telegraph Oppose Napoleon.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PARIS, Aug. 18—4 P. M.—The nomination of Gen. TROCHU to be Military Governor of Paris, and the recall of the Garde Mobile to the capital, inspire great confidence among the people. It is regarded as a proof that the Army of Paris is able to repel any attack of the enemy, and rendering it certain that Paris will be well defended.

THE ARMIES FIGHTING STILL.

Fighting is still going on, but Marshal BAZAINE will only send a report when the result is certain. There is no confirmation of the rumor that Prince FREDERICK CHARLES has been wounded.

ORLEANS DIPLOMACY.

I have just heard from a good source the original cause of the hostility of the London Times to the Emperor, and the sudden wheel around of the London Daily Telegraph in the same direction. Lady WALDEGRAVE, of Strawberry Hill, a great friend of the ORLEANS family, is showing great social attention to the London journalists, with a view to make partisans. Mr. DELANE, of the London Times, dines there three times a week, and has been the more easily won over by her Ladyship from the fact that he lost £30,000 in the time of the Hohenzollern affair by stock speculations for a rise, on the faith of an announcement of the settlement of the war question by M. OLLIVIER'S organ, Le Constitutionnel. Among the recent conquests of the siren of Strawberry Hill are Mr. and Mrs. LEVY, of the Daily Telegraph. They receive the honor of an invitation to her Ladyship's dinners, and the allegiance of that journal was secured.

FORTUNE SMILING ON FRANCE.

The declarations of the Minister of War in the Chamber, this afternoon, excite great exultation. Fortune at last seems to smile on the French arms. R.

THE WEEK'S STRUGGLE.

Sanguinary Fighting on Thursday—Result of the Recent Movements—Merlin Dispatches—The Head Quarters of Clausen.

LONDON, Aug. 19—9 P. M.—The following is the latest from the seat of war. There was fighting all day on Thursday near Mars le Tour. The latest French dispatches are full of expressions of confidence of victory.

THE PRESENT SITUATION.

The Times publishes a special telegram from Berlin this morning, which contains the following intelligence: The French Army has been separated by the victory of the Prussians at Mars le Tour. The main body has been forced back on Metz, and brought to a stand by the First and Second German Armies under Prince FREDERICK CHARLES and Gen. STEINMETZ. The road is now open to Chalons for the Crown Prince, who has only Gen. TROCHU and some fragments of Marshal McMAHON'S corps to encounter on the way. He may leave CHARLES FREDERICK to watch Marshal BAZAINE. The decisive event impends. The ground between Metz and Verdun has been the scene of constant carnage since Sunday.

[It is quite evident from Marshal BAZAINE'S dispatch, dated at Verdun, that the above statement is a fiction from beginning to end.]

Wednesday's Combat—Official Report of Marshal Bazaine—The French Held their Ground—Terrible Fighting—The Battle Lasts Until Nightfall.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—The following official dispatch from Marshal BAZAINE has been made public:

VERDUN, Aug. 17—6 o'clock P. M.—This (Wednesday) morning the army of Prince FREDERICK CHARLES commenced a sharp attack on the right of our position. The cavalry division of Gen. FORTON, and the Second Corps, under Gen. FROSSARD, made a firm resistance. The divisions of another corps, which were in echelon to the right and left of Rezonville, came up successively and went into the action, which lasted until nightfall. The enemy deployed considerable forces and made repeated efforts to resume the offensive, which were vigorously repulsed. A fresh corps d'armée endeavored to turn our left. We have everywhere held our positions, and have inflicted heavy losses on the enemy. Our loss is serious. Gen. RAYTANLE was wounded. In the heat of the action a regiment of Uhlans charged on the staff of BAZAINE, and twenty of the Marshal's escort were placed hors de combat. The Captain commanding the escort was killed. At 8 o'clock the enemy was driven back along his entire line. It is estimated that 120,000 Prussians were engaged.

Tuesday's Conflict—The French and German Statements—Conflicting Stories—Heavy Losses in Distinguished Generals—Prince Albert of Prussia Reported Killed.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—The following news is made public this morning:

FRENCH ACCOUNT.

GENERAL HEAD-QUARTERS, Aug. 18—5 P. M.—In the encounter of the 16th inst. the corps of Gen. LAMARMARILE formed the extreme right of the army. A battalion of the Seventy-third Regiment of the line destroyed a Prussian regiment of lancers, and took its colors. There have been many brilliant cavalry charges, in one of which Gen. LE GRAND was killed at the head of his division. Gen. MONTAGNE is missing. The Prussian Gens. DOERING and WEBER were killed, and Gens. GROSSTEAS and VON BARON were wounded. Prince ALBERT of Prussia, commanding the cavalry, was killed. The following morning we were masters of the position previously occupied by the enemy. On the morning of the 17th several combats with the rear guard took place near Gravelotte. The force of the enemy in the battle of the 16th may be approximately estimated at 150,000 men. We have not yet the exact figures of our losses.

[In a London dispatch, which is a copy of the above, it is stated that the report in reference to Prince ALBERT is not confirmed.]

GERMAN ACCOUNT.

BERLIN, Aug. 19.—The Staatsanzeiger, of this city, has the following details of Gen. STEINMETZ'S movements:

"The General succeeded in engaging the enemy while the latter was retreating from Metz in a southerly direction, and obliged him to pause near Artiesch, where, approaching on the left bank of the river, Prince FREDERICK CHARLES overtook the French left on the 16th. The Prince had the Third Corps, which, although it had been engaged at Saarbrücken and Forbach, instantly attacked the enemy in company with Gen. STULZNAGEL'S Fifth Division, and maintained its ground against a superior force for six hours, until the Hanover Corps, with the Twenty-second and Twenty-fifth Divisions, arrived on the scene. These six divisions under Prince FREDERICK CHARLES repulsed the Third, Fourth, Second and Sixth Divisions of the French and the Imperial Guard. The Prussians took 2,000 prisoners, two eagles and seven guns, and constrained the enemy to a rapid movement from the banks of the Mosse to the fortified city of Metz."

Monday's Night—The Particulars as Communicated by an Eye Witness—The Movements of Napoleon During the Affray.

The Gaulois says the following particulars have been communicated by an eye witness, belonging to a regiment of chasseurs:

PREPARING FOR THE STRUGGLE.

The Emperor left Metz with the advance guard on Sunday last for Verdun. On that day there was a bloody and protracted engagement. The Prussian Army was repulsed by our troops, and lost from 16,000 to 18,000 men. Nearly all their cannon fell into our hands. The guns of Fort St. Quentin played an important part in this battle, and with terrible effect.

THE BATTLE.

On Monday, about 9 o'clock in the morning, a detachment of Chasseurs d'Afrique was sent to reconnoitre the woods in the neighborhood of Mars-le-Tour. They suddenly came upon three regiments of Prussian infantry and two batteries of artillery, which immediately opened fire. Col. GALIFET ordered his men to charge, but at that moment an order came from BAZAINE to fall back on the road and protect the passage of the Emperor, and the Chasseurs returned and encamped a little above Jarny. About 2 in the afternoon the Emperor, who intended to sleep at Conflans, passed over the road going in the direction of Verdun, as at Conflans several Uhlans had suddenly appeared, and shot over the road like a flash of lightning. Our cannon thundered all the evening from the direction of Etain, and the roar of the cannonade was still heard at 6 o'clock A. M. At about 7 o'clock thirty-five Uhlans passed the camp and disappeared in the woods, all traces of them being lost.

NAPOLEON'S MOVEMENTS.

On Tuesday the Emperor arrived at Verdun at noon, and left in a train at 2½. Two regiments of Chasseurs had been ordered from Chalon to watch the woods and guard the railroad track. The person who communicates these details belonged to this detachment. He met the train bearing the Emperor at Saint Menehould. With the Emperor were M. PIETRI and Prince MURAT. It was reported that the Prince Imperial and Prince NAPOLEON also accompanied him. The train consisted of only two third-class cars for the passengers, two for the horses, and three baggage vans. It reached Rheims in the evening. At Verdun we could hear the sound of the cannonade coming from the direction of St. Michel. At St. Menehould it was reported that Bar-le-Duc had been occupied by the Prussians since 4 P. M.

Sunday's Battle—French Account—The Prussians Forced Back—Reports About the Armistice Asked For—The Losses and the Forces Engaged.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—The Figaro, today, has the following details of the battle of Longueville: The battle occurred at Borny, four kilometers from Metz, and not at Longueville, as has been stated. The battle commenced on Sunday. Half of our army, which was slowly retreating, were passing the Moselle, at this place, on one bridge.

THE PRUSSIAN ATTACK.

The Prussians made a mistake, and attacked about an hour too soon. The corps of Gens. L'ADMIRAULT and DECAEN were able to face the enemy in about half an hour from the time the first attack was made. The Prussians had evidently a plan of the fortifications of Metz, but which apparently did not contain any indication of Fort Quentin, for in trying to avoid Fort St. Julien they marched directly toward Fort St. Quentin, which when they came within easy range opened a very destructive fire on them. In their confusion, the Prussians retreated and came within range of the gunned Fort St. Julien, which also opened fire, increasing the loss of the enemy.

A SECOND REPULSE.

The Prussians then attacked another point of our position, which was defended by only one regiment of infantry and a masked battery of mitrailleuses. The latter immediately uncovered and made great havoc in the ranks of the Prussians. The firing ceased at 12 in the evening, having lasted from 4 o'clock. We had about 1,000 killed and perhaps as many wounded.

THE FLAG OF TRUCE.

The Prussians sent a flag of truce, demanding an armistice, for the purpose of burying the dead. They admitted a loss of 5,000 killed. The armistice was refused.

THE FORCES ENGAGED.

In this battle the First Corps of the Prussians was commanded by Gen. MANTEUFFEL, and the Seventh Corps by Count ZASTROW. They had 50,000 infantry, 10,000 cavalry, and 96 guns.

A Report of the Situation from Within the Walls of Metz—Particulars of the Fighting on Sunday—After the Battle—Scenes and Incidents in the City.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—A special correspondent writes from Metz on Monday as follows: Yesterday we thought ourselves shut up here, and all chance of sending letters gone, for we got nothing, even from Paris. But this morning I hear a post will start for the Capital and I take my chance of your getting what I am able to tell you from the inside of a town which is surrounded by armies, whether French or Prussian does not much matter so far as news is concerned.

SUNDAY'S BATTLE.

At 11 o'clock on Sunday Marshal BAZAINE effected a grand reconnoissance with one division of LADMIRAULT'S Corps. At 2 P. M. a battle commenced on the right at Borny. Until 4 it was of no great importance. Then the Fourth Army Corps forming the first line of battle, accomplished a maneuvre intended to deceive the Prussians into the belief that it was retreating. This was at 12½ P. M. The Prussians fell into the trap, rushed forward and attacked with surprising vigor. Then the Fourth Corps, whose retreat to the left was a mere feint, fell at once on the enemy's flank while MACMAHON on the right attacked simultaneously. The Prussian attack in the meantime had been developed in great force on the French centre. The movements on both sides were effected with singular precision, and the whole spectacle was like a review at Chalons. The Prussians advanced in close column against the French line, which their artillery, splendidly served as it was, had vainly attempted to shake.

THE MANNER OF FIGHTING.

The French officers consider that the Prussian infantry was relatively inferior to their artillery. The needle-gun is heavy, and appears to incommode them greatly when climbing a hight or moving rapidly over broken ground. The soldiers themselves were active. They fired, lying flat on the ground, seeking cover from every irregularity, but do not use their knapsacks as the French do, to make little ramparts in front of them and rests for their guns. It is true, as has been said of the other battles of Woerth and Forbach, that the Prussians fired with great deliberation, while the French rattled away as fast as they could discharge their Chassepots.

THE REGIMENTS ENGAGED.

The regiments most closely engaged were the Sixty-ninth, Ninety-ninth, Forty-fourth, Sixtieth, Third, Eightieth, Fifty-fourth, Sixty-fifth, and Eighty-fifth of the Line; the Eleventh and Fifteenth Foot Chasseurs, and the Eighth, Ninth, and Tenth Batteries of the First Regiment of Artillery.

THE CASUALTIES.

Those which suffered most were the Forty-fourth and Ninetieth of the Line, and the Fifteenth Foot Chasseurs. The Forty-fourth especially was terribly shattered, while the Eighty-fifth, though in the thickest of the action lost but thirty-nine men killed and wounded. The Colonel of the Forty-fourth was killed. The Colonel of the Third Horse Chasseurs and Gens. DUPLESSIS and CASTAGNER were wounded. As it is impossible to leave the town, and the action was fought, or at any rate begun, at some distance outside the fortifications, I cannot pretend to give you the account of an eye-witness, nor a complete account at all. The above details are mostly gathered from officers coming into town after the fight was over. At the beginning I followed a troop of Hussars as far as permitted, and what I saw of the fight was from a hillock close by the wall.

INCIDENTS.

A staff officer came to summon the Hussar regiment, with some officers, with whom I was seated in a cafe. In five minutes they ran off and halted at first on the hillock above mentioned. On a sudden signal they went tearing away to the front, and, in a moment more, the artillery on both sides had covered the valley of the river and the whole visible works in front, and the ground beyond with a thick cloud of smoke. There was nothing to do but return to town.

THE RESULTS.

By 8½ o'clock in the evening a bulletin was placarded in the streets saying, "Firing is nearly over. The Prussian lines extended three leagues. Ground gained in every direction." It did not say by whom ground was gained. Officers who came back later from the field maintained that victory stayed with the French; that the Prussians had been outgeneraled and lost heavily, while the French were comparatively little engaged. But a Prussian officer who had been taken prisoner and who came into my cape on parole with a French officer, told a different story. Said he, "You had better surrender at discretion; we are more than a hundred thousand strong, you will be crushed. As to the battle, you had your own way at first, for we believed we had only a division in front; but you know what the end was." It is difficult to question even officers closely, as here are still the suspicions about spies; and to ask whether the French Army had suffered a defeat would be to expose myself to instant expulsion, or worse. Hence I can give you only such particulars as are collected in the ways I have mentioned. As a Frenchman, I believe in the success of the French arms; but I know not why the advanced columns have withdrawn again under the walls of the fortress.

AFFAIRS ON MONDAY.

This morning (Monday) there were reports of heavy artillery toward Thionville, but all is again quiet. We only know that Sunday's conflict was not decisive and that another battle is imminent. The troops are never at rest. Maneuvres in one direction or another are going on constantly. Orders have this moment been issued that no civilian shall leave the city on any pretext. Two shots from Fort St. Quentin have just demolished the head of the Thionville Railway bridge at Metz Station. I am told it was done to cut off a detachment of 800 Prussians encamped at Montigny, who attempted to cross the Moselle, and were seen from the fort. Montigny is two kilometers distant from Metz. At 7 o'clock this morning two Prussian cuirassiers entered that town. They were followed by four others. They were followed by four others, and breakfast was served to the whole six, which they paid for. They promenaded the town till 9 o'clock and withdrew not only unmolested by anybody but carrying of two prisoners, a St. Cyr pupil and one orderly. All this at a mile and a half from Metz, will give you a notion of the dash and boldness of the Prussian cavalry. Last night we thought we heard the Prussians shouting victory, notwithstanding the defeat we believe they suffered. But it seems some of their regiments sing hymns nightly with accompaniments from their military bands—a custom they have preserved from the battle of Leuthen, where they advanced to the charge singing LUTHER'S hymn. They follow it with hurrahs. We heard them distinctly. The Emperor and his staff, the Prince Imperial, and all are at Longueville. As I write, there passes a closed carriage escorted by a picquet of hussars in command of a Captain of the Staff. It contains a Prussian Envoy, reconducted to his own lines. Our officers say he brought a request for an armistice, and admitted that the Prussian losses were considerable, but he did not tell his errand to them nor to me.

Significant Admission of King William, of Troe—The Army of Charles Frederick Nearly Destroyed—The Siege of Strasbourg Reported Abandoned.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—The Gaulois has a report that the British Ambassador here has received a dispatch from King WILLIAM, confessing that but little remains of the splendid army of Prince FREDERICK CHARLES.

STRASBOURG.

La Parlement asserts that the siege of Strasbourg has been abandoned, but the statement is not confirmed.

Napoleon—Interesting Account of His Movements—The Prince Imperial—Prussian Tactics to be Imitated.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—The Emperor is still at Rheims.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—The Figaro makes the following record of the movements and doings of the Emperor:

THE TRIP TO CHALONS.

On Tuesday, the 16th, the Emperor, who had not yet heard of the battle of that day, received the Mayor and Sub-Prefect of Verdun, and spoke encouragingly to them. He was then accompanied by the Prince Imperial, but was almost without escort. He went to the railway station and demanded a train. The officers of the road could furnish only a third-class car, and the Emperor assured them that he would be satisfied with that. The Prince Imperial seemed to be greatly fatigued. A locomotive preceded the train to see that the road was clear. The next morning at daylight the Emperor reached Chalons.

ORDER ISSUED AT METZ.

While at Metz the Emperor issued the following order, which was printed and distributed among the officers:

"The Prussians commence an action by putting forward a small force, but placing heavy battalions behind their good positions. They then form a line of sharpshooters, who, under cover of woods, keep up a constant fire and gradually gain the flank of their enemy. When the sharpshooters are well engaged the Prussians put forward strong bodies of troops, who try to envelope an armer the hostile lines as fast as possible. Having given these details the Emperor concludes by directing the officers to imitate the tactics of the enemy."

THE BATTLE OF WOERTH.

From the Headquarters of the Crown Prince—How the Fight Was Won—McMahon's Retreat—The Fortifications of France Defective—How the Prussians Win Battles.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—A special correspondent at head-quarters of the Crown Prince of Prussia writes on the 12th inst.: "The more that we gather of the details of the battle of Woerth, the more clearly does it appear that there was no miracle about the affair—no sudden surprise to military critics, as though a new weapon had been discovered. From the villages in the rear of the field I gather far more of the French movements than could be learned from the prisoners or the villagers upon the field itself.

THE FRENCH OUT-MANEUVERED.

It would seem that the Imperial commanders in this quarter were altogether out-maneuvered by the Crown Prince, and that whatever the merits of the respective small-arm fire may have been, there was no comparing the tactics of the two armies. Some say even now that the Chassepot is a better rifle than the needle-gun. But be that as it may, the French allowed themselves to be so placed as to require no common degree of fighting to save them. First we hear of their blind confidence and of their cries, "à Berlin!" while they were really in desperate danger.

THE DEATH OF GEN. DOUAY.

Then came the news of the surprise at Weissenburg, and the death of Gen. DOUAY. He was posted in a corner of the French territory, with a mass of German troops collected on his flanks, and was much further from his supports than prudence warranted in the face of such an enemy. It can never be known whether the French commander would have extricated his men with less loss than they actually sustained, had he lived to direct them, for he fell by one of the first discharges of artillery. Thus was a step gained by the Germans.

MACMAHON'S MOVEMENTS.

They had gallantly stormed the position at Weissenburg, and had begun to shatter the enemy in detail. MACMAHON and DE FAILLY were now called on to act. The former marched against the Crown Prince with his whole corps d'armé, and, as was believed among the French soldiers, expected DE FAILLY to support his left in case of a check. Here, again, was the impetuous over-confidence which Frenchmen are apt to show. The second opportunity of meeting them in detail was given to the Germans, and a bloody battle was the result. The Prussians and Bavarians together far outnumbered the corps of McMAHON. We may take it that the Crown Prince had at least half as many again disposable troops on Aug. 6 as his opponents.

THE FORCE OF THE CROWN PRINCE.

I have heard twelve to seven, on good authority, mentioned as the odds in the fight at Woerth, and before McMAHON had been long engaged he was sending an aid-de-camp after to beg hog help from FAILLY. The distance was not great to Bitche, and the messenger must have arrived in time to bring the desired help, if only everything had been ready. But here again over-confidence prevailed. One French corps was destroyed before the other came to its support.

THE DAY AFTER THE BATTLE.

I have heard that on Sunday, that is on the day following the battle, a large force was in the rear of where McMAHON had fought. People who saw it tell with wonder of the rush of the beaten army westward and the advance of angry and almost incredulous troops toward the front. It was too late to renew the battle; too late to save the fine regiments which lay strewn over the fields at Woerth. The more desperate the resistance, the more they had been shattered, and at the last there had been a sort of panic.

THE RETREAT.

Fresh lines are last hands as relieving after a defeat. It seems certain that the fugitives from Woerth were in great disorder as they passed through villages ten miles in the rear. The corps of FAILLY could only have sacrificed themselves unlikely when close McMAHON'S corps had been demolished, and to have fought a second battle at Woerth, would have been to play into the hands of the Crown Prince, who would have lifted nothing better than to engage the whole French Army in detail, and beat them by division. We either underrate, then, or do the better general who has the largest force present in the nick of time.

FRANCE NOT WELL FORTIFIED.

France is not properly fortified for a war with United Germany. Those little places which hold a few hundred men and did well enough in old times are useless against modern artillery. There is, for instance, an eminent fortress among wood-covered hills, a quaint picturesque stronghold of Alsace called Le Petite Pierre. Once it was much esteemed as a check to an invader coming through the Vosges, but now it is abandoned without firing a shot. The black and white colors of Prussia wave over the citadel, and a quantity of military stores have been captured therein. It was not ready for defense when the Prussians came. The outer and more important work was unfinished. Therefore La Petite Pierre was abandoned to the great relief of its inhabitants, who had feared destruction, and the Prussians quietly marched on. Now, if a strong fort, say an iron-clad tower, had been upon this hill of which I speak, the Crown Prince must have sent heavy guns against it. I do not say that any mere fort by a roadside would hinder the German invasion.

THE FORTRESS OF LA PETITE PIERRE.

But this little fortress of La Petite Pierre, among its wood-covered hills, illustrates two points of the Frenchmen's unreadiness for this strange upsetting of all their plans. First, the fort was old-fashioned and insufficient. Second, it was not equipped for defense. The movement of troops is notorious, though no one is told whither they are going, and with each advance the Prussians bring forward their field-post and their telegraph.

THE PRUSSIAN TACTICS.

A more perfect system of organization it is difficult to imagine. The columns of provisions creep like great serpents over the country. The active detachments of telegraph men push on with their light poles set up at intervals and their slowly decreasing coils of wire; and their field post office brings letters to the different divisions. From side to side for many a mile, the whole country is on the move. Now a regiment of cavalry goes by with infinite jingling of harness and clattering of hoofs. Now the bayonets of the infantry shine out among the trees, or there is an interminable train of guns dragged past. I fancy that the villagers are simply astounded at what they see, and think that all Germany is upon them. The soldiers laugh, and tell of the other two great armies which are invading France. The fatherland is quite safe. The war has scarcely troubled a single German village, not one on this part of the line, and rife as it may, the men are thoroughly cheerful.

M'MAHON'S RETREAT.

Another Letter From Edmond About—The Result of a False Alarm at Saverne—Scenes and Incidents.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—EDMUND ABOUT continues his description of the retreat of McMAHON'S Corps, in a letter from Saverne, dated Monday, Aug. 8, as follows:

"Yesterday, Sunday, the 7th of August, at 6 o'clock, upon I know not what false alarm, perhaps only because three or four scouts of the enemy were announced on the side of Steinburg, the Duke DE MAGENTA caused the General to be beaten, and Saverne thought itself lost. Officers and soldiers threw themselves pell-mell upon the Falsbourg road. Three-fourths of the people went off wildly toward the neighboring forests. A sad example was set by the gendarmes and the sergents-de-ville. The town-folk closed their shops, and piled up the furniture upon carts. Some of the farmers drove their cattle before them, as in the time of Abraham. There were incredible accumulations formed, both of men and animals, in the houses of the foresters and in the ruins of the old castles. The morning all is calm in the town, or, to speak more accurately, all is dead there. The invasion is expected from one moment to another, and no one dreams of defense against the 120,000 men of the Prince Royal. The Mayor invites the bakers and butchers to re-open their shops. A few devoted men and some brave women divide themselves between two ambulances, of which one is at the hospital and the other at the Asile Impérial. There remain only sixty wounded or so. One hundred and sixty have been sent on to Saarburg. Almost all the Zouaves and Turkos made their escape last night, fearing to be murdered by the Prussians. How they have been able to drag themselves as far as Falsbourg, being in such a state as they were in, I scarcely know. They must have stolen horses and carriages. Mine was recovered this morning at 8 o'clock, perfectly sound, from half a dozen stragglers, who had replaced the traces with turbans unrolled."

NAVAL MATTERS.

The Blockade of the Baltic Effective—Feeling in Hamburg—A Naval Order Signed by Palikao.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—Dispatches from Copenhagen state that the blockade of the Baltic ports by the French fleet has been declared effective. Ten days have been allowed for all vessels outward bound to get off.... A Hamburg letter says the people there are quite reconciled to the blockade—adapting their business to its requirements.

A MARITIME ORDER.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—The Journal Officiel, of this morning, publishes the following as having been approved by the Empress:

MADAM: The ports of Cherbourg, Brest, L'Orient, Rochefort and Toulon having been declared in a state of siege, if the letter of the provisions of the decree of Oct. 13, 1863, were to be strictly followed, the powers intrusted to the military authorities by virtue of the state of siege should devolve on the Generals commanding the territorial divisions within the limits in which are situated these five ports. Yet these powers are not intrusted to any maritime authority by the terms of the sixth article, except in case of an unforeseen attack, the present circumstances and the general interest in the defense of the country demand the abolition of said article. Therefore, after having a consultation with the Minister of the Marine, I have the honor to propose to your Majesty to decree that the maritime prefects be invested with the extraordinary title of superior commanders of all troops stationed within those five military posts. PALIKAO.

PARIS.

The Excitement in the City—Preparations Against Famine—Bulletins—Care for the Wounded—The Tuileries as a Hospital—The Villette Affair—Notes.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—There is intense excitement and enthusiasm because of the news of repeated French victories. The streets are full of processions, and crowds of people are roaring the Marseillaise. Notwithstanding the great excitement there has been no disorder.

THE DEFENSIVE PREPARATIONS.

The Constitutionnel, today publishes an article stating that Paris is now a stronghold. The armed force is very great. The Admiralty has equipped the forts, which have been armed completely. Enormous quantities of provisions have been stored in the city, and much more is reaching here daily. Mills have lately been erected here capable of furnishing more flour than the resident population could use. Some of the heaviest dealers in grain have engaged to furnish all that is needed, without any reference to the price, leaving that matter altogether to the discretion of the Government. The different journals compliment such evidences of sincere patriotism. Members of the Garde Mobile arrive here from the provinces daily, by thousands. They are fine men, and need only a few days drilling to make good soldiers.

THE OPINION OF BAZAINE.

The Gaulois says: "We may now affirm that we have a great General at the head of our armies. The greatest proof is his calmness in the hour of victory. He awaits sure results before he telegraphs his successes. For whole days he has resisted the temptation to announce good news, until nothing can compromise the hopes he might raise."

THE WAIFS AND THE WOUNDED.

The Empress takes part in the movement in favor of the wounded. She has ordered her apartments at Compiègne to be prepared for that purpose, and has decided upon trying the system inaugurated in America, during the recent civil war, of caring for the wounded in tents, where plenty of fresh air can be obtained. The private gardens of the Tuileries have been turned into an outdoor military hospital, which has been placed under the superintendence of Dr. NELATON.

THE BANK OF FRANCE.

Great crowds collect daily around the doors of the Bank of France to obtain specie for bills. The brokers charge a premium of ten per cent. for coin. The Patrie defends the officers of the Bank from the charge of negligence in not preparing to meet the demand for small bills, and promises that an enormous quantity will be ready in a few days.

THE VILLETTE AFFAIR.

As the Council of War will not meet until Saturday, the civil magistrates have examined the rioters of the Boulevard de la Villette, and sent those against whom prima facie evidence of guilt is adduced to prison to await trial before the military Court.

NOTES.

The publication of the journals Centre Gauche and Cloche has been suspended by order of the military authorities. A Council of Ministers was held today.... The Patrie, noticing the rumor of an deficiency of cartridges and munitions of all kinds here, says the supply is enormous and is daily increasing.... The journals say the French prisoners complain that the German postal authorities refuse to transmit money orders to them.

The City Guard—Confidence Restored—Corps of Sharp-Shooters Organized—Trochu's Defensive Measures—Prince Napoleon at Chalons.

PARIS, Aug. 19—Afternoon.—It is noticeable that crowds of excited people no longer surround the hall of the Corps Legislatif, and the ordinary quiet of the city is fully restored. The intense popular interest is apparently subsiding, and there is much less fear of excesses. The conduct of the people along the Boulevard de la Villette continues good. They sided the Police against the rioters of Monday, making many arrests themselves.

THE FOREIGN OFFICE.

Prince DE LA TOUR D'AUVERGNE has taken possession of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

SHARP-SHOOTERS.

Organizations of corps of sharp-shooters are becoming very numerous, and they will do good service, as the men are generally accustomed to the use of arms. Baron MALORTIE, a Hanoverian, has addressed an appeal to the Hanoverians in France to form a legion of sharp-shooters. He says he is not against German but Prussian tyranny, and that his wish is to combat the HOHENZOLLERNS, who tried to efface from the map of Europe the name of Hanover. MALORTIE is said to be a nephew of Count BISMARCK.

INDIGNATION OF AN IMPERIALIST.

The Gaulois says that M. PINARD, Ex-Minister of the Interior, was with difficulty dissuaded from interpellating the Chambers on the proclamation of Gen. TROCHU to the Parisians, because the Emperor and Empress were not mentioned in the document.

ADDITIONAL DEFENSIVE MEASURES.

Gen. TROCHU held a meeting this morning with the officers who are to take part in the defense of Paris, at which all necessary measures were adopted. Gen. TROCHU has his head-quarters at the Elysée. The Liberté says orders have been given to cut down the Bois de Boulogne and Vincennes, and adds that the population of Paris need not be alarmed, as this is merely a necessary precaution. The Corps Legislatif is in session today. The authorities have taken 1,600 more horses from the Omnibus Company, which has lost most of its conductors, who have gone into the Garde Mobile.

PRINCE NAPOLEON.

Prince NAPOLEON has sent his family to Prangins and his property to Switzerland. The Prince himself is with the army at Chalons.

Meeting of the Leaders of the "Left"—The War Sustained.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—The Gaulois says the most important members of the "Left" held a meeting and decided that the Government be advised to make no mention of peace so long as a single Prussian is on French territory, and not then even can the war cease at once. The Prussians driven away, France must combine with Europe to obtain such guarantees as will insure the future.

Execution of Prussian Spies in Paris—Continued Arrests of Suspected Parties.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—The journals, this morning, say that nineteen Prussian spies have lately been arrested. After trial and condemnation by the Council of War, they were shot at the Fort de Montrouge. Among the executions were five officers of the enemy's Etat Major, who were arrested, some days since, in the Plain of Satory, near Fort d'Ivry. These spies were disguised, and were taking notes of the plans of the fortifications.

ADDITIONAL ARRESTS.

The authorities continue to arrest suspected parties. Many discoveries have been made of arms and papers, demonstrating the widely-extended system of Prussian spying throughout France. The public has been greatly excited by these important developments, and demand imperatively that the severest punishment be meted out to such enemies. Additional arrests of Prussian spies were made yesterday.

THE CORPS LEGISLATIF.

A Session on Thursday Night—Palikao's Announcements—Why Trochu Was Made Commander in Paris—Prussian Bullets—Bismarck's Regiment Cut to Pieces.

PARIS, Aug. 12.—In the Corps Legislatif, last evening, Count PALIKAO, the Minister of War, took the floor, and, in response to an inquiry, made an explanation relative to the fact of Gen. TROCHU being declared Governor of Paris. The Government regarded it as a wise movement, he said, to confide the defense of the City of Paris to a person eminently qualified to insure the security of peace in the minds of the citizens. Gen. TROCHU will be replaced in the command of his corps. [The Reserves were formerly under his command.] Count DE PALIKAO then informed the Corps that it was certain the Prussians had suffered severely in the late engagements. Their centre had been especially crippled. They had tried to retreat to St. Michel, but were not able to effect a junction with the Prince Royal. The entire regiment of White Cuirassiers, under the command of Count VON BISMARCK, was totally destroyed near Schlettstadt. The French peasants attacked a detachment of Prussian dragoons, and made them prisoners. The Count then dwelt upon the fact that a dispatch from Brussels, emanating from a Prussian source, made no mention of these French victories. The remarks of the Minister were received enthusiastically by the Deputies.

THE FRENCH PRESS.

Stringent Urged—A Change of Intimidation by Bismarck—Prussian Government of French Provinces—Hostility to the London Times.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—The Liberté publishes a leader urging reprisals. It says: "The Prussians without pity shoot peasants and tax heavily the populations. They war like savages. Without imitating them, let us do what the laws of war permit—tax the population of the Prussian coast. Let our ships at Bremen, Hamburg, Lubeck, Dantzig, Konigsberg and along the whole coast make requisitions of all kinds. Let no time be lost. We must treat the enemy as we are treated."... The journals here refuse indignantly the reported accusations of the Prussians that French troops fire upon ambulances, in violation of the Convention of Geneva.....L'Opinion Nationale announcing the appointment by the Prussian King, of Governors for the Provinces of Lorraine and Alsace, says: "Woe to the conquered should Prussia succeed. France will be treated with unexampled rigor. She will be dismembered, robbed and crushed, so that she may not at some future day seek revenge and thus the source of democracy may be destroyed. The present war is one again of the old against the new right—that of the people against the Kings." The Paris journals are bitterly hostile to the London Times.

THE POPE AND PRUSSIA.

Efforts for Peace—Letter of the Pope to Prussia's Ruler—Reply of King William.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—The following is the letter of the Pope to King WILLIAM, proposing mediation:

YOUR MAJESTY: In the present grave circumstances it may appear an unusual thing to receive a letter from me; but as the vicar on earth of God and peace, I cannot do less than offer my mediation. It is my desire to witness the cessation of warlike preparations, and to stop the evils—their inevitable consequences. My mediation is that of a Sovereign whose small dominion excites no jealousy, and who inspires confidence by the moral and religious influence he personifies. May God lend an ear to my wishes and listen also to those I form for your Majesty, to whom I would be united in the bonds of charity. Given at the Vatican, July 22, 1870. PIUS.

A postscript adds: "I have written identically to the Emperor."

The King's reply is as follows:

MOST AUGUST PONTIFF: I am not surprised but profoundly moved at the touching words traced by your hand. They come the voice of God and of peace to be heard. How could my heart refuse to listen to so powerful an appeal God witnesses that neither I nor my people desired or provoked war. Obeying the sacred duties which God imposes on sovereigns and nations, we take up the sword to defend the independence and honor of our country, ready to lay it down the moment those treasures are secure. If your Holiness could offer me from him who so unexpectedly declared war assurances of sincerely pacific dispositions and guarantees against a similar attempt upon the peace and tranquility of Europe, it certainly will not be I who will refuse to receive them from your venerable hands, united as I am with you in bonds of Christian charity and sincere friendship.

(Signed,) WILLIAM.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Reported Demands of Prussia—King William to be Emperor of Germany—An Orleans Prince on the French Throne—Peace Gossip in London.

LONDON, Aug. 18.—The demands of the King of Prussia are reported to be as follows: That he (King WILLIAM) be declared Emperor; that Alsace and the City of Strasbourg be given to the Grand Duchy of Baden; that Bavaria be fully compensated in money for her services and expenses in the war; that the Emperor NAPOLEON be deposed, and that an Orleans Prince be placed on the throne of France. The feeling is universal in favor of those

NEW MAGAZINES.

—The Modern Thinker: An Organ for the Most Advanced Speculations in Philosophy, Science, Sociology and Religion. No. I. New-York: 1870. This publication will attract very general attention, not only on account of the ability of the writers engaged in it, but also from the character of the work to which the editor, Mr. D. GOODMAN, and staff, have addressed themselves. The journal is a novelty in this country. It is designed to give expression "to the advanced thought of the time on philosophical, scientific and religious questions." Consequently there will probably be very much in each number which the "orthodox" would regard with extreme suspicion. But those who like to study every aspect of the age in which they live will not allow this publication to go by them unread. The editor avows himself a Positivist, of the school of COMTE, a distinction which he shares with some of the first thinkers of the age. He evidently has original views on subjects of less importance than those which the author of the Cours de Philosophie Positive used to treat. For instance, he has printed his journal on various colored paper and in various colored inks. His reason is put in a few words: "I print this publication in contrasting colors because my readers are still barbarians in matters of color." He also says:

"While it is very trying to the sight, and the paper generally used is one of the principal causes of the diseases of the eye so common among students and all who read a great deal. Then black is a vile color, or rather is no color at all; it is an absence of light, and indicative of opulence, smut, decay, death. Let it be banished from all good books hereafter to be published and given over to foul and obscene writings."

The popular books of the future must be printed in all the colors of the rainbow; but black and white should be sparingly, if ever, used. Art will come into play in deciding for what color each topic should be treated, for every passing emotion and thought even has a shade of color.

I do not hesitate to assert that white and black for reading matter are simply infamous and damnable. They are murderous outrages upon the sense of sight. The dense stupidity of the whole reading world respecting this important matter is another mortifying instance of the fossilization of the human mind. Let the man who book-publishing interests will decide this effort to get back to nature and common sense, as a change would involve loss to them. Not will oculists and opticians favor it if they understand their business interests. The great idiotic, stupid reading public will jeer and howl at this attempt to save their eyes and keep up the sale of spectacles; but the projector of the Modern Thinker is satisfied that he has begun an important reform, and that in fifty years from now there will be no white paper or black ink used in publications, except as examples to show the folly of the present and past generations."

We shall say nothing of the effect produced by this plan of making a journal look like an album or scrap-book, but our readers must not condemn the publication because it has an "eccentric" look. Among the contributions, there is one by Mr. FREDERIC HARRISON on the "Positivist Problem," and the beginning of a series of papers by a very able journalist—Mr. D. G. CROLY—entitled "What of the Future?" In the present number, Mr. CROLY deals with the "Future of Marriage," a paper which will make some people's hair stand on end, but which is at least worth attention. Mr. CROLY simply describes the modifications which he believes are destined to take place in the institution of matrimony. Mr. CROLY also writes on "Steam as a Factor in Sociology." Another article which will be much read is by JOHN H. NOYES. Mrs. JENNIE JUNE CROLY has a very interesting paper on the "Love Life of Augustus Comte." Altogether, this journal will make a sensation.

—Scribner's Monthly. The reading public will be much interested by the announcement of a new illustrated magazine for the people, with the title of Scribner's Monthly. The first number, for November, will be issued early in October. Perhaps in a technical sense the magazine may not properly be described as new, since it is to take the place of Hours at Home, which enjoys a very wide and honorable reputation. But the Monthly is to possess many new features of great excellence. It is to engage the best writers procurable in this country and Great Britain; its size, typography and general appearance are to be handsome enough to command general admiration, and it will be profusely illustrated with first-class productions of the artist. Of course the title indicates the publishers—Messrs. CHARLES SCRIBNER & CO. When we add that Dr. J. G. HOLLAND (Timothy Titcomb) will be the editor, we convey the assurance to the many thousands of that gentleman's readers and admirers that the enterprise will be a perfect success. Mr. ROSSWELL C. SMITH will, with Dr. HOLLAND, be associated with the Messrs. SCRIBNER as part owners, and Mr. SMITH will represent the business interests of the magazine.

—Harper's Magazine, September. This number is more than usually readable and interesting—no slight praise to give to Harper's. It contains an admirable article, profusely illustrated, on the "Mediterranean of the Pacific," a continuation of Mr. MONCURE D. CONWAY'S "South Coast Saunterings in England," and of the spirited history of FREDERICK the Great. Another article, "Among the Peaches," is full of information, told in a very pleasant manner. The general features for which the magazine is famous show to great advantage in this month's number, and, altogether, the editor may be congratulated upon having more than maintained the high character of the publication. Among the poetical pieces scattered through its pages is the following by Mr. S. S. CONANT:

THE MESSAGE.

Oh, bear a message, gentle wind—
And linger not upon thy way—
To one who longs for an hour to-day
Her ear, by city noise, undinned.

Will hear thy gentle whisper, hear
And understand thy fairy tones
Which speaks of one who sits alone
Whom thoughts of her alone can cheer.

I will not give thee words to bear;
In passing thou hast read my heart;
Bear that to her, who has the art
To spell the utterance of the air.

—The Galaxy, for September. In this number Mr. JUSTIN MCCARTHY begins his new novel, entitled "Lady Judith; a Tale of Two Continents." Mr. RICHARD GRANT WHITE has a "characteristic" paper describing three types of "American" women. As Mr. WHITE puts the word "American" between inverted commas, we must do so too. His sketches of the three ladies are very fascinating; and as the end of his article he adroitly knocks Mr. JUSTIN MCCARTHY down with one hand, and picks him up with the other. He calls Mr. MCCARTHY "our Irish friend" and "that warmly-approving Irish traveler." Let us quote Mr. RICHARD GRANT WHITE'S opinions with regard to "American" women:

"The truth of this question is, that according to the observation of all 'Americans' who have had opportunities of comparison, either abroad or at home, 'American' women are far less interested in or acquainted with politics, even the politics of their own country, than European women of equal culture, no matter what their nationality. 'American' women abroad are frequently put to a nonplus by questions about politics which their friends there ask them, and suppose them to be able to answer, as a matter of course; and the knowledge of politics and the lively personal interest taken in the political, and even the mere party, struggle of the day among English, French, German and Italian women, is one of the social phenomena with which the traveling American is most impressed. A heavy wager might be safely laid that of the women, old and young, present at any large social gathering in New-York, Brooklyn, Albany or Buffalo, not three in ten could tell the name of the Governor of the State, and of the two New-York Senators and of the member of Congress from her own district. We have just gone through a great civil war, the result of which has been a complete subversion of the Federal Constitution, and a total change in the political condition of the country, and which has cost almost every woman in the land the life of at least one friend or kinsman; and yet a wise wager might be safely laid as to their knowledge of the questions which that war has settled. Our amiable critic may be sure that he would find that knowledge limited generally, even among the better educated and more intelligent on the fact that the South was not allowed to go, that the slaves were freed, and that we have now negro voters, negro members of Congress, and negro Judges—facts the last of which many even of the most anti-slavery, patriotic and loyal among them do not contemplate with any very great degree of equanimity. And as to talking in clearly projected sentences, sentences with a beginning, a middle, an end, sentences built with the entrecote of parentheses in their original design, where indeed did our Justinian judge and sign here who talk in that marvelous fashion, except in these, so to say, unauthorized guesses in which he did not find one dull American? Think of it, O suffering Yankees, who have undergone the social oppressiveness of large boarding-houses, where the alternative is silence or inanity, and where 'the gloom is not solely attributable to the hash!'"

In this number also, there is a very funny contribution by Mark Twain, and several good articles which we are obliged to pass over without extended notice.

—Lippincott's, for September, is an unusually attractive number. It opens with thirteen pages of more than average blank verse by EMMA LAZARUS, entitled "Admetus," which is followed by the "Story of the Sapphire," by LUCY H. HOOPER. JOHN LESPERANCE gives us a pleasant account of a trip to Manitoba, and DON PIATT a chapter "On Dogs." ANTHONY TROLLOPE'S story of "Sir Harry Hotspur of Humblethwaite" is continued through two more chapters, and a variety of other pleasant light reading fills the number. There is but one heavy paper in it—Mr. COPE'S essay on the "Hypothesis of Evolution"—all the rest being admirably suited to the season.

Our staid old Boston favorite—the Atlantic—presents its buff face for September, bearing an excellent bill of fare. Mr. HILLIARD contributes an interesting paper on HAWTHORNE'S English note-books, and Mr. T. W. LORING a poem on the church-yard at Fredericksburg. BAYARD TAYLOR'S story of "Joseph and his Friend," is continued to the close of the twenty-fifth chapter. Miss KATE FIELD gives us a lively critique on FOURIER; Mrs. HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD a story; LUCY LARCOM sells pretty sonnets, and a pleasant variety of other articles completes the list.

Under convoy of its staid old page, the Atlantic, comes Our Young Folks, for September, with all manner of pleasant reading for the little ones. Mrs. WHITNEY'S story of "We Girls" is continued through the tenth chapter; Mrs. STOWE gives us a sketch entitled "Lute's Pupil," which is accompanied by a characteristic illustration by S. EYTINGE, Jr.; Mrs. DIAZ furnishes another installment of "William Henry Letters," and a variety of short entertaining and instructive articles follow. The new feature of the magazine—prize essays by children—is a good one, and will undoubtedly prove popular with the readers. Altogether the September number is a very attractive one.

Our New-York Eclectic Magazine, edited by W. H. BIDWELL, and published by E. R. PELTON, is out for September. The selections seem to be very judiciously made with reference to the tastes of American readers, as well as the intrinsic value of the articles.

CURRENT NOTES.

On Tuesday last the thermometer stood 120° in the shadow of the stone ledges of Rattlesnake Hill, N. H.

Four large docks are about being built at Duluth, Minn., for the use of the Northern Pacific Railroad. The cost will exceed $200,000.

FRANCIS C. FILLEY, formerly Lieutenant-Colonel of the Fourth New-York Regiment, has been arrested in Springfield, Mass., on a charge of false pretenses.

The United Presbytery of Western Missouri has adopted a resolution providing for the severe punishment of persons found in the act of tripping the light fantastic toe.

During the past year, 1,760,000 pounds of zinc were turned out by a company at St. Louis. The capital required for such an enterprise does not exceed $250,000.

Rev. J. W. ROBINSON, the great clerical forger of Iowa, is said to have had his life insured for $100,000 in various companies, with a view of a sham death and a handing of the money by his "afflicted" wife.

A census taker in Michigan recently had his orthography severely tested in an effort to record the name of a beautiful young lady, which was declared by her parents to be LUNA AURORA BOREALIS.

An Iowa exchange estimates the wheat crop of that State at 24,000,000 bushels. He bases his calculations upon, the presumption that 3,000,000 acres of land have been used for the crop this year.

Mrs. MARY BRUNETTE, a blonde, of Detroit, Mich., recently stole a march on her husband during a temporary absence from home, sold his property, "farmed" out her babies, and eloped with a member of shoes.

A handsome young patrolman at the Highlands, near Boston, has been suffering so much from the "persecutions" of the fair sex in that delightful neighborhood that he threatens to resign, and remove elsewhere.

An engineer of Schenectady, N. Y., named CHARLES CRAIG, left his home mysteriously a few nights back and has not since been heard of. He is supposed to have been murdered and his body thrown into the river.

Seventeen males and sixteen females died at Worcester, Mass., last week. One of the seventeen committed suicide. Most of the female deaths occurred from dysentery, spotted fever, heart disease and cancer.

Two trotting horses named respectively Bismarck and Napoleon are to have a trial of strength today on the race-course at Rome, N. Y. The "Romans" are in sympathy with Bismarck, but intend to give Napoleon fair play.

A young colored woman of Beloit, Wis., who recently accepted a contract to paint a house, began by "painting" her own face with red lead and oil. She did it because she thought "colored folks ought to have all colors in their cheeks."

Two young ladies, sisters, named STEWART, and a young gentleman named SANDERS, were drowned a few days ago while attempting to ford a stream, at Greenville, Ill. This makes the third case of a similar nature in different States within a week.

A young Frenchman, sentenced to nine months' imprisonment in the Penitentiary of Maryland, on hearing of the success of the Prussian arms, matured his plans, and escaped for the purpose of joining the French Army. He is now on his way to France.

A feat of rope-walking by a female at Keene, a small town in the West, well nigh ended fatally a few days ago. She was precipitated a distance of seventy-five feet, and would have been killed but for the fortunate presence of a canvas tent, which broke the fall.

A husband and wife at Cincinnati, Ohio, were recently discovered in a beastly state of intoxication at their own home with three children lying close to them upon pallets of straw, but so weak from long fasting as to be unable to move hand or foot.

New-Orleans seems to have been having a monopoly of the lost child business for some time past. No sooner has the DIGBY boy been recovered than we hear of the loss of a ten-year old boy by a Mrs. ELIZABETH N. SIMPSON, of the same city.

In justice to Rev. Mr. REGHTMYER, pastor of a Lutheran Church near Troy, N. Y., it seems only right to say that the charges of conduct unbecoming a clergyman, which have been preferred against him, prove to be very much exaggerated.

WILLIAM C. COFFIN, the defaulting treasurer of the New-Bedford Savings Institution, is suspected of having appropriated $3,000, the property of spinsters, residents of that city. If the suspicion should prove to have been well-founded, the "unfortunate" gentleman may have occasion to look out for his "coffin" in good earnest.

Miss UNIQUE BELKNAP, of Clinton, Ind., has commenced an action for breach of promise against a Bostonian, whose name has not transpired. Several bundles of letters, containing the usual terms of endearment, have passed between the parties. One of the epistles is particularized as being perfectly "unique."

A woman recently went to place a child in the care of its father at New-Orleans, so that she might be free to work for herself. The father, on seeing her enter the coal-yard where he was employed, seized a handful of dust and threw it in her eyes, while he beat a hasty retreat, and started for parts unknown.

FRANK R. GHIARD, of Geoomonowoc, Wis., a gentleman in holy orders at that city, who has the misfortune to be better favored than most of his brethren, is at present on trial for fulminating with the affections of a young widow, whom father has threatened to take summary vengeance upon if he does not make the amends honorable.

A young married woman named CLARA attempted to blow her brains out on the 17th inst., while wandering through the streets of Chicago, in consequence of some difficulty she had had with a gray-coated gentleman, the companion of her walk. She was quite cool, and he was very much excited from the fear that his name might "get into the papers."

A lady residing near Hamilton, Canada, was awakened from a disturbed sleep the other night, to find that a sneak thief had dropped down the chimney, and was in the act of collecting her jewels. She got out of bed with no much rapidity that he lost presence of mind, and jumped through the window into the yard, a distance of nearly a hundred feet.

The bell-ringing mystery at the house of Mayor Lewis, at Meriden, Conn., has at length been satisfactorily explained. Similar experiments were noted at the same time in different parts of the State. The phenomena is accounted for from the fact that the atmosphere was so strongly charged with electricity that it set all the bells ringing within a circle of fifty miles. It is very curious that the Mayor's, among all the bells of Meriden, should have been the only one rung.

Ex-Chief of Police Bowers, of New-Haven, Conn., claims that he has not had fair play from the city fathers, and that he should have had the privilege of hearing the charges of black-mailing made against him, and taking steps to refute them. In the concluding paragraph of an address to the public he takes comfort from the fact that there are officers still on the police, who, were they to have their due, would be now serving our sanitarium in the State Prison for crimes of old standing. The authorities couldn't do better than clear out the whole force.

The editor of the Galveston (Texas) Bulletin has a very refined way of pointing out public grievances. He "whispers" his complaints in this way: "We would like to put our mouth to the ear of the Board of Aldermen and softly hint to them that reading minutes is a performance that is played out. Minutes should be printed and be on the desks of members. Where time is valuable we can imagine no more irritating performance than to listen to the fearful monotone of the Assistant Secretary drawling out words that no one can understand, for be it known that our Assistant Secretary's English is a language that was not understood at Babel nor since."

THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

Speaker Blaine's Letter of Acceptance to the Republicans of the Third (Maine) Congressional District.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE, in accepting the renomination for Representative to Congress in the Third District, has written a letter presenting in an able and forcible manner the principles and progress of the Republican Party during GRANT'S administration, of which the following abstract will be of interest:

During the seventeen months of GRANT the public debt has been reduced from $2,757,253,200 to $2,322,234,478 (Aug. 1)—$435,128,724—over $140,000,000 per annum. During the seventeen months preceding GRANT, under the Johnson dynasty, the public debt was increased $99,000,000. Yet under GRANT the taxes have been reduced: 1, showing greater efficiency and honesty in the collection of the revenue; and, 2, the disbursement of money with greater care and fidelity. Contrasting the two periods, we see the difference to the Treasury in favor of GRANT of $140,000,000, about $11,000,000 per month.

The Democracy had the President, but a Republican Congress restrained that "famous" party from further mischief. What would they not have done and do if they had full sway!

Mr. BLAINE proceeded, in his caustic way, at length to review the evil deeds of the Democracy and its catering to the Southern idea of repudiation.

The Republican Party is opposed to high taxation. Had the high rates existant at the close of the war been retained, the product would have exceeded $600,000,000, beside $200,000,000 from imports, (in gold.)

Under GRANT, thus the public debt would be extinguished. It would, however, have been oppressive and unjust to the present generation.

At every session since the war closed Congress has reduced taxation by tens of millions. Duties on tea, coffee and sugar, have been largely reduced, and the free list greatly extended. The internal revenue taxes have been swept away so clean, that of the enormous list imposed by the necessity of war only the following remain:

Tax on spirituous, vinous and malt liquors.
Tax on tobacco and cigars.
Tax on incomes.
Tax on national banks.
Tax on gas.
Stamp tax.

No one, Democrat or Republican, can find an easier mode, a smaller list, to raise the $322,000,000 needed. The Republican Party are in favor of reducing the rate of interest on the public debt, thereby saving millions to the people. Mr. BLAINE refers to the unsufficient resources of the country and their enlarged prospect of development. Let the entire debt be funded at four or four and a half per cent. The total bonded debt will soon be reduced to $2,000,000,000. The expenses for the current year are reduced over last year $105,315,426 29, exclusive of the interest on the public debt and pensions to the maimed soldiers and the families of the deceased veterans. For similar objects under BUCHANAN, when the Democracy were in full power, the same objects cost over $70,000,000 per annum in gold—equivalent to $85,000,000 in paper today. The population of the country then was less than thirty millions, and now it is forty millions. Thus President GRANT would be entitled by a ratio that has always governed expenditures in this country, to spend a third more in the administration of the Government than was required under BUCHANAN, bringing the sum total to $114,000,000, when in reality it is only $105,000,000. The details of expenditure in the two periods show immensely in favor of President GRANT'S economy.

Under President BUCHANAN the army consisted of nineteen regiments, costing for four years an average of over $21,000,000 per year, more than $1,000,000 per annum in gold, or about $1,300,000 in paper money of today for each regiment. The army at present consists of forty regiments, and yet its whole maintenance for the year costs but $21,000,000, a trifle over $1000,000 in paper money to each regiment. This same honesty and economy is shown in all other branches of the Government, all the more praiseworthy and honorable in view of the large amounts expended.

The Forty-first Congress is praised for its work in lightening the burdens of the people, the Democrats in the Senate and House resisting it and young in solid phalanx against the bill making a reduction of duties on tea, coffee and sugar, and whereby a large free list was added to the tariff and $60,000,000 of internal taxes entirely removed. They also voted against the bill which proposes to fund the public debt and reduce the interest to four per cent, and thus immensely decrease the annual charge upon the people. With few exceptions they voted against the bill which gives the West and South a fair proportion of banking capital and which on a specie basis, makes the banking system free to All who wish to engage in it, as by right and justice it ought to be. These few instances show the whole animus of the party.

Mr. BLAINE eulogizes the Republican Party for its glorious record. It is now in its seventh year of power. He traces its career from LINCOLN'S first inauguration down to the present hour, being severely caustic on BUCHANAN'S Cabinet, COBB, FLOYD, TOUCEY & Co. are handled with out gloves.

Mr. BLAINE continues he says: The most gigantic of rebellions has been crushed; the great evil of slavery has been extirpated; the national credit has been revived and the national faith maintained; great public works have been projected to completion; the continent has been spanned with telegraphic wires; the two oceans have been connected by iron bonds; our entire domain is organized with civil government; new States of wealth and power have been added to the Union, and old States, purified as by fire from the taint of treason, have been reconstructed and once more clothed with their appropriate powers. And all these results have been achieved not only without the aid but against the efforts of the Democratic Party.

A political organization of such respectable antecedents as the Democratic Party was utterly destroyed by the events that, in the hour of war, its sympathies were not actively on the side of its country. Low murmurs of sympathy with treason, and condemnation of the Government, were heard from the Democratic Party, which actually made upon the loyal mass, while the Northern wing was divided between sectional sympathy with the rebellion and tardy support of the national authorities. It is not wise, I know, to keep alive animosities or inflame resentments, and I do not recall these painful facts with any such desire, or any such purpose. But I am persuaded that great evils would result to this country by sentencing to power the men who attempted to destroy it, and I believe it is an imperative and patriotic duty to keep the people aroused to the necessity of averting even the possibility of such a disaster.

SOUTHERN POLITICS.

Ex-Gov. Orr's Reasons for Joining the Republican Party in South Carolina—An Able Document.

The Charleston Courier of the 17th inst. has the following very able letter from Ex-Gov. ORR, of South Carolina, explaining his reasons for joining the Republican Party:

MESSRS. EDITORS: In response to inquiries addressed to me by friends, in letters and otherwise, I shall proceed very briefly to state my opinions on the political issues presented to the people in the canvass now progressing in this State:

1. I shall vote for SCOTT and RAINEY, Republican nominees for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor.

2. I cannot vote for the nominees of the Union Reform Party, because, in my judgment, the purpose which they propose to accomplish is entirely impracticable, and the nominations made by their Convention will not only accomplish no good results, but the consequences of the nominations and canvass must be pernicious.

The avowed purpose of the Convention was to effect reforms in the administration of the State Government. In the interest of its department retrenchment and reform are doubtless greatly needed—some of its offices are filled by incompetent and corrupt men, who should be driven from the places they occupy. More economy in the appropriation and disbursement of public money should be enforced. How are these objects to be attained? The only reforms in the State Government that can be successfully accomplished, at least for many years to come, must be by and through the Republican Party and its organization. They have control of all the departments of the State Government, and have a majority of more than thirty thousand votes to prosecute (and perpetuate that trust) so long as an opposing party, disavowing Republicanism, is organized in the State to defeat and displace them, so long will party machinery and appeals to party appliances preserve its unity and supremacy. If we want an illustration of the strength and cohesiveness of party organization, and its perpetuation, look to the State of Vermont for thirty years prior to the war, when it annually rolled up its 25,000 or more majority for the Whig Party, despite all the efforts of the Democracy, aided most of the time by Federal influence and patronage.

When you attempt to reform a party by destroying it—which is the present method of reform adopted—the first law of nature, self-preservation, appeals to each member of that party to resist the new movement and avert its destruction. Such an antagonism has another most baleful influence; the most active and oftentimes the most unscrupulous partisans exaggerate the importance of disturbing the party lines and discipline, and the great mass of the honest portion of the party are thus diverted from a careful examination into the fitness of those seeking to represent them, and from abuses and corruptions existing in the party.

An antagonistic party may be organized with great effect, which may succeed in the success in driving the party in power or its leaders, who are guilty of miracle, from their supremacy, but is there such a prospect in the present canvass. The colored vote is, and has been from 1867, nearly a unit for the Republican Party, and have they acted unwisely or unpatriotically in their undivided devotion to the Republican Party? Suppose our conditions, the white race, were reversed—that we and our ancestors had been slaves for 200 years—that a party had made war to give us freedom—that it had succeeded—that the same party had perfected its own supremacy by guaranteeing to us our civil rights—and that we were all perhaps equally sincere in conferring those rights, had been secured to us by solemn Constitutional enactment by the same party, and we were in the face of all this appealed to by those who had opposed all these great boons, to join with them in overthrowing the party of our deliverance and redemption, would our patriotism and our sense of gratitude patience say such a proposition. Would it not be most ungrateful for the colored man to renounce such a party, when its very existence is now threatened? Some of his leaders, white and colored, may be incompetent—corrupt—treacherous; but he would exhibit a strange oblivious ness to his interests and his duty, if he joined an organization to destroy his own party, even before he had attempted to reform it.

The relative population of white and colored are as three to four, and the vote may be assumed to be the same. The colored majority is more than 20,000. Assuming that the great issues of the war are virtually settled, the Republican Party, and the foregoing views, confirmed by the experience of the last past five years, does it not conclusively show that if there is dishonesty and peculation in departments of the State Government, that it cannot be reformed by a reform party? Does the figures show that it is not too much to expect a majority of 25,000? This view of 25,000 majority is upon the assumption that every white man in the State votes the Reform ticket. But when the ballots come to be cast it will be found that there are many white Republicans in South Carolina; many more whites who will vote the Republican, than blacks who will vote the Reform ticket.

If I have shown that Reform cannot be accomplished through the Reform Party, it devolves on me to show how not only Reform is to be accomplished, but how a larger infusion of the intelligence and virtue of the white race can exercise its just and legitimate influence in the councils of the State. It must be done through the organization of the Republican Party. The wise and experienced in good faith must go into the Republican Party, acquire a fair and legitimate influence, aid in selecting the most competent and deserving men for official position in the Republican ranks, and when confidence has been attained by good faith and sincerity, the highest intelligence and virtue will be invoked by the Republican Conventions for service in the offices of trust and responsibility. The greatest obstacle in accepting this suggestion by many conscientious men who heretofore belonged to Democratic and other organizations, was removed by the nomination and platform of the Reform Convention.

The distinguished nominee for Governor is a Republican—his associate for Lieutenant-Governor, no less distinguished, was formerly a Democrat. The Convention was composed mainly of gentlemen who formerly belonged to the Democratic Party. The platform adopted, in its essential features, was Republican. It accepted and proposed to sustain the Fifteenth Constitutional Amendment, and made no political issue with the Republican Party, except—reform. To vote for either of the nominees for Governor, is to vote for a Republican. To sustain either of the platforms is to sustain the leading features of Republican principles. Now, then, the Reform Party—its form Party—its nominees and platforms—and say his devotion to principles precludes him from joining the Republican Party!

Before the Convention met many persons objected to uniting with the Republican Party, because it involved an abandonment of political principle—Democratic, or other. Back as we went into the Convention, and much as now united in action, have broken down that barrier, and are very quietly and very conscientiously walk into the Republican ranks—especially as every one of the old issues between the Democratic and Republican parties have passed away or been settled. If no substantial difference exists in the principles of the Republican and Reform Parties, how much more could have been accomplished through the Republican organization, at the October election, to reform abuses, than will be accomplished by the Reform Party?

Suppose one hundred of the most intelligent white citizens in each county had gone, in good faith and with frank sincerity, into the Republican organization. Can it be doubted that their influence and moral strength would have secured honest nominees? If members in the last Legislature were corrupt, would not such an influence have defeated their renomination? Who can doubt it? This would have been effective and practical reform, and it would have gone a great way to break down that distrust the public feeling felt toward the native white. A distrust which was at first even manifest, and which was greatly increased in 1868—the first election in which the whites participated after reconstruction—when the blacks were attempted to be persuaded to vote for a party whose avowed principles looked to their disfranchisement.

Is it strange the colored Republican should be cautious and adhere with pertinacity to his party? Can we justly hope to exercise that political influence over him, which, we now constantly do in all the other relations and duties of life, until he is convinced that we intend in good faith to protect him equally with the whites, not only in his person and property, but in all his civil and political rights?

If the whites of the State heretofore adhering to the Democratic Party have renounced its principles and consented to vote for a Republican for Governor, and for a Republican platform; why should they allow mere prejudice of a party or sectional sympathy, to prevent an organization in which, if they enter, they can justly claim and enjoy the confidence of the colored man, and effect the reforms needed, and elevate into the service of the State men of the highest intelligence and virtue.

The nominee of the Republican Party for Lieutenant-Governor is a colored man. Does not their number of voters entitle that race to recognition in the official positions of the State, when they present a man qualified to fill the position he seeks?

Is such a nomination so obnoxious as that the ticket should be rejected? Was not the name of a colored man presented to the Reform Convention for Lieutenant-Governor, and did not leading white delegates of that Convention oppose the nomination on the ground of race? And why was a colored man not nominated? The proceedings of the Convention shows it was because the majority of the delegates were colored men! My conviction, therefore, is, that the intelligence of the white race in this State can never be made to avail in influencing the management of the Government, affairs and interests of the colored race, only, of the colored race. That the colored race is devoted to the Republican Party unalterably, and will continue so as long as the organization exists, and that such devotion is the natural and necessary result of its many kindnesses to them. That the old issues between the Democratic and Republican Parties are settled or superseded, bank tariff, internal improvements, &c., are no longer living issues, and that affiliation with the Republican Party in existing issues involve no sacrifice of principle.

Thus if this great Reform Party disbanded before the platform and nominees of the late Reform Convention removes every plausible plea for any of those who were delegates and now support its action in South Carolina.

That having unanimously adopted the principles, platform, nominees, especially the white men, to enter and affiliate with the Republican Party, acquire influence with its members, and through them correct abuses and perfect reform, is the consistent course.

That the antagonistic position of the Reform Party, not only to the alleged corruptions and abuses of the Republicans, but to the existence of the party itself, not only precludes all hope of ameliorating or remedying under their banners the evils, but it is their interest to look more to self-preservation than to any corruptions or mismanagement of the Government, and to that extent is a serious injury to the State.

That notwithstanding the fact that just cause of complaint may exist against the Republican Party for acts of omission and commission, they have done much to ameliorate the condition of the white people of the State, by authorizing which the legislature of the State in 1868 and 1869 refused to grant.

That party has reduced a homestead to the head of every family. Thousands of women and children in this State would have been homeless and homeless, naked and starved, but for the beneficent provisions of the homestead amendment. Every year this protected should be increased, where it is not already, so as to furnish a shelter in numbers and sixty over the heads of his wife and children, and despite the State claims of heartless creditors.

That this same party has protected all debtors in their Constitution from paying debts contracted for slave property.

That this same party has been equal to the humanities of the age in abolishing imprisonment for debt.

That this same party, whatever may have been its extravagance or improvidence, has raised the market value of the bonds of the State from twenty-six cents in January, 1868, to about ninety cents at the present time.

If good and true men will consent to accept the results of the reconstruction, and the legislation, Federal and State, necessarily growing out of them—if they will accept the new conditions surrounding us—if they will affiliate with the Republican organization, especially in this State, we will gain largely by what they have done correctly, and much can be accomplished to correct what they have done that may have grown up in the anomalous state of affairs surrounding us.

Believing no good result can flow from the Reform movement, I shall vote for the nominees of the Republican Party.

Very respectfully,
JAMES L. ORR.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Aug. 15, 1870.

THE RUTGER ESTATE.

A Reminiscence of Forty Years in the Present Century.

WATSON says in his annals of New-York: "The residence of Col. RUTGER, though originally far out of town on the east side, has been so encroached upon by increasing population, that it is well-nigh obliterated." Few, indeed, who have not watched the gradual change that has crept over this neighborhood, would recognize in its squalid, neglected appearance, the scene of that wealth and refinement which made it attractive.

FORTY YEARS AGO.

One by one the old landmarks have been torn away, hills dug down and streets cut through, till of the old Harman farm—originally bounded by Division, Montgomery, Water and Catharine streets, and said to have been purchased by Col. RUTGER'S ancestors for a hogshead of rum early in the last century—little remains but tradition. Any one now passing through Rutger-place will observe in the centre of the block

AN OLD GRAY-STONE MANSION.

Its proportions are still handsome, and inside may be found a few traces of past magnificence. But this last relic of the RUTGER family is much defaced. It has long since fallen into strange hands, and is at present occupied by BRIGGS' extensive barrel manufactory. The spacious halls, once resonant with the music of the gay throng wont to assemble there, echo now only the cooper's song, while his rude articles of merchandise fill every available spot within, and without cover in unsightly confusion the ample grounds, whose rare floral attractions were once the pride of the neighborhood.

The old Rutger mansion, of which few living, perhaps, have any remembrance, stood, in about the centre of what is now Rutger-place, embowered in tall shade-trees and surrounded by finely-cultivated grounds. The limit of these grounds, after the laying out of the great farm into building lots, which commenced about 1770, was from Banker, now Madison-street, on the north, to Cherry-street, on the south, and from Clinton-street, on the east, to Jefferson, on the west. In the early part of the present century, the period already referred to, this house was comparatively isolated. It stood in full view of the river, then flowing to the foot of Cherry-street, and was surrounded only here and there by a few aristocratic residences, which, like the Colonel's, were on the far suburbs of town. On the corner of Rutger and Henry streets stood Dr. MILLEDOLLAR'S church, built in 1769 on ground donated by the Colonel, whose name it bears, and adjoining which went up at a later date the two three-story brick houses now standing, and then occupied by the pastor and Col. RUTGER'S nephew, familiarly known as BILL CROSBY. This church was rebuilt in 1841, and is now owned by the Roman Catholic fraternity of Christian Brothers.

THE FIRST FREE SCHOOL IN NEW-YORK, after the experiment in behalf of the Almshouse children in 1806, for which Col. RUTGER also donated ground, was erected on Henry-street in 1811; and Rutger's Institute, the free seminary now located on Fifth-avenue, originating in the necessities of the "select few" of this neighborhood, was established on Madison-street over thirty years ago.

One of the most conspicuous houses near the Rutger's estate at the time of which we speak, was that of the Bloomer family, on the corner of Cherry and Clinton streets.

Of Col. RUTGER, who lived to an advanced age and died a bachelor, many creditable stories are told by those who witnessed his kindness to the poor, or were themselves partakers of his generous hospitality. All children who knew him regarded him as their special friend, and merry indeed were the Christmas mornings that found the ragged urchins gathered about the old man's door, for to wish Col. RUTGER a merry Christmas was to insure a bountiful supply of these "good things" of which poor children in these days know so little.

Another well-known resident of this vicinity was JOB FIRMAN, corner of Jefferson and Harman streets, proprietor of a large lumber-yard. In 1825 this man became a special subject of public interest and sympathy, as his whole family, consisting of wife, sister, niece and three children, were victims of the first steamboat explosion known in our waters. There may be some still living who will remember the sensations of horror which that frightful calamity on "Old Gimcrow" Elizabethport boat spread throughout the community, or perhaps few can recall the appearance of the participated dead as they lay stretched side by side, to be viewed by the thousands who hastened to witness the effects of the disaster. Poor Mr. FIRMAN, the grief-stricken husband and father, who saw his house thus desolated in the twinkling of an eye, never recovered from the shock, and has long since followed his loved ones.

At the rear of Col. RUTGER'S grounds rose "the green hill" on which was located the famous Belvidere House, built by the Belvidere Club during the revolution. It was at that time presided over by ATKINSON, and became a popular resort for officers of both nations. The house was two-story, and of octagon shape, with a number of windows on the upper floor; and after it had fallen into decay with the generation from which it sprang, the young scamps that followed regarded it with a superstitious awe which caused many a hair to stand on end. A mysterious ghost story had circulated through the neighborhood, in which a midnight spectre played a prominent part, and the venerable window-curtains were said to change colors at certain times a day.

Frequent pilgrimages to this spot were made by the curious children, who would wait and watch for the changes with ears and eyes strained in anxious suspense, ready to bound and fly on the first appearance of the strange phenomena so tremblingly, though persistently sought.

The hill on which the Belvidere stood was one of a vast tract of hills extending along where East Broadway and Grand-street now run, some of them reaching a height of sixty feet. It was on these hills that the children of the vicinity loved to congregate, wandering over the green grass and under the fruit-trees in Summer, and sliding down its icy steeps in Winter. Here, also, was the great rock of juvenile renown, near the present corner of East Broadway and Clinton-street. It measured some fifteen feet high by six broad, and its smooth sloping surface offered a most irresistible temptation to the adventurous youths of both sexes, who in spite of all admonition would scramble up behind, and seating themselves on the top, speed swiftly to the bottom, heedless of the damaged skirts and pants, whose soundness and unaccountable rents were the bane of all careful mothers.

But about 1825 these old landmarks began to disappear. Harmon-street, which became East Broadway, to suit the aristocratic tastes of wealthy residents, was then wending its way gradually through the hills, and in 1828 Division-street, one of the oldest in the City, reached the present Grand-street terminus, when in the same year was built the large Fine-door grocery, a marvel of architecture at that time, and almost alone in the vicinity. It was opened by JOHN LE COUNT, and soon became so popular that people flocked from far and near to admire its appointments, and examine the goods temptingly displayed there. A glance now at its diminutive proportions and dilapidated appearance, must impress the beholder with something of the change which has marked the last half century. The junction of Grand and Cherry streets may be pointed out as the old Corlear's Hook, the reputed treasury of CAPT. KIDD'S MONEY.

The bootless search for this gold has long since been relinquished, and the celebrity of the spot is well-nigh forgotten. But for many years that lonely region was the scene of mighty exploits, mysterious accounts of which frequently startled the whole community. Sometimes it would be reported that red-hot balls shot up as the diggers when they closely approached the gold; at other times, strange noises were heard, and spectres, of hideous forms, were seen wandering about the place, so that however near the adventurous might get to the prize, the evil spirit invariably succeeded in frightening them off. Thus the pirate's treasures were never found, while their locality remains to this day a mystery.

THE CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Singular Effect of the Most-Serious of the Building Failing.

The occupants of the Custom-house, which is supposed to be one of the most substantial granite buildings in the City, have within a few days past been greatly disturbed by the falling of portions of the structure, and fears are entertained lest some of these days some person may be seriously injured. On Sunday last, a stone fell, which, had it fallen on almost any other day of the week, would doubtless have resulted in loss of life, as the place on which it fell is one of the greatest thoroughfares in the building.

The inside galleries of the Custom-house—those which connect the Rotunda office with the wings—are supported by granite columns. These galleries are four in number, and beneath them all, but more especially beneath those of the second story, the travel is almost constant—clerks and others having business in the Custom-house passing to and fro in large numbers during all hours of the day. From the end of one of the brackets supporting the second story, near one of the building, a piece fell on Thursday. From one of the braces supporting the gallery of the fourth floor, on the same

JURY DUTY.

The Amended Law, and its Operation.—Who are Exempt from Serving.—Jurors to be Paid in All Cases.—The New Law to Go into Effect on the 1st of October.

The last Legislature amended the law in relation to jurors and the performance of jury duty, so far as the City and County of New-York are concerned, in many important particulars, a summary of which may not be uninteresting to the readers of the TIMES, especially as the effect of the amended law is to render liable to the performance of jury duty a large number of persons who do not now consider themselves as liable thereto. The new law was passed May 3, 1870, and by its terms was to go into effect forthwith, except that two clauses, one in relation to paying, and the other in relation to drawing jurors, were to go into effect on the 1st of July and the 1st of October, respectively. The general provisions as to the qualifications of jurors remain unaltered, the ownership of real estate to the value of $250 being an essential qualifications. The exemptions from duty have been so far that men of certain trades and callings are not liable to serve as jurors, while men of other trades and callings are liable. The exemptions of persons who are exempt from serving in the Courts of Record, in the City and County of New-York, are as follows: Ministers of the Gospel, and all persons of the same class of persons are exempt from serving in the Courts of Record, in the City and County of New-York, in relation to lawyers, the amendment provides that they shall be "duly admitted and actual practice at the bar thereof," and "not engaged in any civil or military office under the United States." Under the old law it was ruled that if a lawyer were once admitted to the Bar, though he never may have practiced, he was thereby fixed, and exempted from performing jury duty in any Court in this State. It would seem that the new law materially alters the state of things so that if a lawyer is not in actual practice, he is just as liable to serve as any of his fellow-citizens.

As to the exemption by reason of age an important question is likely to arise. The old law exempted persons of sixty years of age and upward, and it is contended by some that the enactment extending the time of liability from 60 years to 70 years is unconstitutional. Probably the Courts will rule it, if the question comes up, that where the party has received the benefit of the exemption, his implied contract with the State is complete, and that he is no longer liable to serve, and, further, that if no such application has been made, and the certificate of exemption issued, the party, whichever way it may under the new law, is exempt from jury duty. The provisions of the old law relating to persons exempt from serving upon the jury, have been retained, and persons who have faithfully performed their duty as Enrolled Members of the State militia, are retained.

The penalties for refusing to attend and serve, when drawn, have been increased. Instead of a fine not less than $25 nor more than $50, imposed in such case, the amended act makes the fine not less than $50 nor more than $250, and gives the Mayor, Recorder, City Judge, County Clerk, and Commissioner of Jurors a Board for the assessment of such fines, with power to issue warrants for the arrest of delinquent jurors. The fines imposed on grand jurors for non-attendance are the same as those imposed on petit jurors, and are to be collected in the same manner. The District (Justices') Courts are to be provided with jurors, not less than fifty nor more than one hundred for each Court—all of whom must be residents of the district in which the Court is held, and no such juror is exempt from serving on the grand or petit juries of Court of Record, unless he shall have the time actually during jury duty in a District Court.

The most important change effected by the amended law, however, is in relation to the payment of jurors. Heretofore this has in Courts has been merely nominal, and in criminal Courts nothing. In the future the new enactment provides that jurors shall receive $2 for each day of actual attendance and service in the Court of General Sessions and in the Over and Terminer; in other Courts and before Commissioners of Jurors, $1 for each case in which he shall be empaneled if the case be tried, and fifty cents for each case in which he shall be empaneled if the case be tried, and fifty cents for each and every case tried by them. It is believed that the new law will work satisfactorily, and will give to the Courts not only a better class of jurors than are sometimes secured on the panel, but that there will be fewer excuses for desiring to escape from this highest and noblest privilege of a citizen. The new law goes into full effect on the 1st of October next.

CRIMES AND CASUALTIES.

Battery-Desire in Freedle—Stabbed by a Drunken Man—Burglaries and Larcenies—Minor Casualties and Accidents.

JOSEPH LICHT, No. 202 William-street, E. H. BURNAFF, No. 27 Cedar-street, JOHN BRENNAN, No. 8 Nassau, and SIMON HERZ, No. 2 Fulton-street, were yesterday held in $1,000 bail each by United States Commissioner SHIELDS, to await the action of the Grand Jury for dealing in lottery-tickets without payment of the tax imposed by law.

At the Jefferson Market Police Court, yesterday, before Judge DOX, EDWARD STRATHMAN was charged with stealing a watch and chain and other articles of jewelry, worth $40, the property of THEODORE JACOBS, No. 451 Eighth-avenue. The complainant states that he discovered the prisoner with the property in his possession, and the Judge summarily committed him for trial.

MICHAEL FARRELL was brought up at the Jefferson Market Police Court, yesterday, before Judge COX, on a charge of feloniously assaulting JAMES COYLE, Foreman of the Sixth-avenue sewer. The prisoner was discharged for intoxication on the day previous by COYLE and returning in the evening made for the latter in the influence of drink, stabbed him with a knife, in the back, side, and stomach. The prisoner was held for trial.

At the Jefferson Market Police Court, yesterday, THOMAS BRYLES was charged with breaking into the premises of JOSEPH LICHT, No. 44 Clarkson-street, and stealing a quantity of books worth $150. He pleaded guilty, and on full to answer. JAMES MCCORMACK, charged with attempting to break into the dwelling of PETER CHTTERBER, on Tuesday night, was also committed for trial.

Yesterday morning, an unknown man jumped from the ferry-boat California as she was leaving the East Houston-street slip, and was drowned. His body has not been recovered.

ELIZABETH MCGARRAGHAN, of No. 28 Fillmore-street, Brooklyn, was taken to the 81st Precinct Station-house, yesterday, in intoxication, but it being stated that she was suffering from sickness she was removed to the Park Hospital.

A man about forty-five years of age was found, yesterday morning, by the Police, at the corner of Mercer and Broome-streets, and being taken to the Eighth Precinct Station-house and examined by Police Surgeon FERLIGH, was found to have a fracture of the skull, and was sent to Bellevue Hospital. The Police give no further clue as to how the injury was received.

AMOS BARNES, of Ordway, was thrown from his wagon at the corner of First-avenue and Twenty-third-street, where his horse shortly succeeded in overturning the wagon, after running from Third-avenue and Sixty-third-street. Barnes was not seriously injured.

SIMEON MOONEY, a ship-caulker, residing at No. 27 Sullivan-street, and EDWARD SULLIVAN, of No. 236 Chambers-street, said to be barber, were in the Tombs, on a charge of grand larceny, yesterday, at the Jefferson Market Police Court, yesterday, at Jersey, of No. 31 White-street, the complainant stated that the prisoners and an unknown confederate entered his store on Thursday, and carried off a piece of cassimere, valued at $40. EDWARD HAMILTON, of No. 101 West Broadway, was the larceny committed, and the Magistrate held the accused for trial.

FRANCIS MOGUIRE, of No. 38 Mulberry-street, appeared before Justice KOCH, yesterday, at the Tombs, and made affidavit against JOHN SULLIVAN, alias "The Kid," for having stabbed him in the back and left shoulder, on the 14th inst., necessitating his removal to the Park Hospital. SULLIVAN had been under arrest ever since the assault, and was fully committed for trial. He is seventeen years of age, resides at No. 45 Oliver-street, and bears the reputation of a desperate ruffian, having been under arrest frequently for assaults.

CLARA DALY, the young woman who testified on the Nathan Jackson inquest relative to the movements of WASHINGTON HATELY, was yesterday arraigned before Justice KOCH, at the Tombs, on the complaint of her mother and brother. They accused CLARA of living an abandoned life contrary to their wishes, and asked to have her sent either to Blackwell's or the House of the Good Shepherd for correctory purposes. The accused stated that she had no wish to continue the life of shame, but that the ill-treatment of the complainants had driven her into it. They had falsely accused her, but when innocent, and by their ill-treatment driven to crime. CLARA's bosom friend and companion, MARY SUTTON, was also arraigned on a similar charge, the complaint being made by her father, MARK SUTTON, a decided preference for her present mode of life. Both of the young women were remanded, but will probably be released.

FRANK H. MYLES was arrested yesterday by Detective TILDEN of the Central Office, on a warrant issued by Justice SHANDLEY of the Tombs, on a charge made by JOHN E. TRAINER, of No. 22 Broad-street, who testified that the accused came to him on the 15th inst. and offered to pay $50, that he owed the complainant, as the same time handing Mr. TRAINER a check on the Nassau Bank of New-York for the sum of $50, made payable to one order of MYLES, and purporting to have been drawn by A. C. WILLARD. Believing the check to be a genuine one, Mr. WILLARD's responsible signature represented by the prisoner, Mr. TRAINER accepted the check, and gave MYLES the difference in the shape of Bank notes. The check for $50 was then sent to the Bank, and discovered that no such name as E. C. WILLARD was known as the Nassau Bank. Justice KOCH, in the absence of the Magistrate granting the warrant, issued MYLES for examination on Tuesday.

Mr. Thompson EMERY, of No. 244 West-Broadway, and Charles EMERY, of No. 244 West-Broadway, and Charles EMERY, of No. 244 West-Broadway, and Charles

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE WAR.

Our correspondent at Paris telegraphs that Mr. VERTEMILE, one of our war correspondents, has not been seen since the 10th inst., when he returned to Metz after the expulsion of all the foreign correspondents, and great anxiety is felt for his safety. It is proposed to scrutinize the prisoners who arrive from the front in Paris today, to see if Mr. VERTEMILE is among them. Gen. TROCHU has established his head-quarters in the Palace of the Elysée. Our Madrid correspondent telegraphs to Paris that the leading members of the Spanish Ministry are negotiating with the Republicans, but the latter are not disposed to listen to the overtures, having determined to await their opportunity, as Spain requires but a word from France to become republican. The Bank of Paris, considering itself released by the war from the contract, has refused to pay the Spanish Government the installment of 125,000,000 francs contracted for. The nomination of Gen. TROCHU to be Military Governor of Paris inspires great confidence. The capital is now thought able to repel any attack. No reports were received from the front, on the 18th, Gen. BAZAINE declining to send dispatches until the result is assured. The reported wounding of Prince FREDERICK CHARLES is not confirmed.

In our general dispatches fighting all day on Thursday near Mars la Tour is reported. The French dispatches bear a confident tone, but advices received in London from Berlin represent that the Prussians, under Prince FREDERICK CHARLES and STEINMETZ, obtained a victory in the battle, and forced the main body of the French back on Metz. The road to Chalons is now said to be open for the Crown Prince, who is advancing to attack FROSSARD with three corps. The position at Metz is regarded as critical. NAPOLEON is still at Rheims. The ground between Metz and Verdun has been the scene of constant carnage since Sunday. An official dispatch from Marshal BAZAINE, giving the details of Wednesday's battle, is posted in Paris. The Prussians, it is stated, were repulsed in every attack. The losses are reported as "serious." Additional particulars of Tuesday's combat are given. The French dispatches claim a victory. Gen. LE GRAND is reported killed, and Gen. MONTAIGN missing. Of the Prussians, Prince ALBERT, of Prussia, commanding the cavalry, and Gens. DOERING and WEDEL are said to be killed, while Gens. GROOTEN and VAN RANCH are wounded. The German account gives a different version of the affair, and the French are reported to have been driven back from the banks of the Mouse to Metz with a loss of 2,000 prisoners, two eagles and seven guns. Details through French sources are given of the battle of Sunday, which occurred at Borny, four kilometres from Metz, and not at Longville, as has been stated. The fight lasted from 4 o'clock in the afternoon until 7½ in the evening. The French loss is said to have been 1,000, while that of the enemy was 3,000. The reported refusal of an armistice asked for by the Prussians is confirmed. The Paris Figaro gives an account of the recent movements of NAPOLEON. On Tuesday he was at Verdun, and the Prince Imperial left that place the same evening for Chalons, where he is reported to have arrived at daylight on Wednesday morning. In a letter written from Severne, dated Monday, Aug. 8, EDMOND ABOUT continues his description of McMAHON's retreat, and gives an interesting account of the position of affairs at that place, and the panic which ensued upon the sounding of a false alarm the day before.

The news of reported victories cause intense excitement in Paris, great crowds parade the streets singing the "Marseillaise," but no disorders are as yet reported. The city is now considered a stronghold. The armed force is very large, and great precautions have been taken to guard against famine. Mills, capable of furnishing more flour than could in any event be used, have been erected within the walls. Members of the Garde Mobile from the provinces continue to arrive daily. The Gaulois of yesterday pays a high tribute to the abilities of BAZAINE as a commander. EUGENIE takes part in the movements for the care of the wounded. The American system of tent-hospitals is to be used, and the private gardens of the Tuileries have been converted into an out-door hospital. The rioters implicated in the Villette affair have been examined, and those proved to be implicated in the affair sent to prison to await trial before the military court. A council of Ministers was held yesterday. Prince DE LA TOUR D'AUVERGNE has taken possession of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Companies of sharp-shooters are being organized. Prince NAPOLEON is at Chalons with the army. Nineteen Prussian spies, recently arrested in Paris, are reported to have been tried by a council of war, condemned, and shot at the Fort de Montrouge. Arrests continue to be made, and several suspected parties were seized yesterday. In the Corps Legislatif, on Thursday evening, Count PALIKAO explained the reasons for the appointment of TROCHU as Commander of Paris. In reference to the war, he said that the Prussians had suffered severely in the recent engagements; that in an effort to retreat to St. Michel they had been foiled, and were now unable to effect a junction with the Prince Royal. The entire regiment of white Cuirassiers under BISMARCK's command he added, had been totally destroyed near Schlettstadt. The remarks of the Minister were received with enthusiasm.

Among the demands of the King of Prussia, as reported in London, are these: That he shall be declared Emperor of Germany; that NAPOLEON shall be deposed, and an Orleans Prince placed upon the throne of France. The London Morning Post denies that any peace negotiations are on foot, and also the presence of Prince MURAT in England. It is said to be certain that King WILLIAM has refused all propositions looking to an armistice outside of Paris. Austria's and England's efforts to dissuade France from expelling German citizens have been of no avail. The Germans of the Northern States of Germany will go to Belgium, and those of the Southern States to Switzerland, where provision has been made for their proper treatment. The blockade of the Baltic ports, a Copenhagen dispatch states, has been declared effective. The people in Hamburg are said to be reconciled to the situation. The text of another secret treaty is published in our dispatches. The French Government will soon open a national loan. Algeria, it is reported, will send 20,000 volunteers to France. The report that Mr. BURNS's wife is a Prussian is contradicted.

The Race to Paris.

Now that the first shock is over, a more confident tone appears to prevail in Paris. It would be difficult to explain the grounds of this confidence, unless upon the supposition that it is merely a reaction from the recent panic. We cannot see that the French are less in danger of utter defeat than they were before. Marshal BAZAINE has indeed inflicted heavy losses upon the Germans, but they are able to withstand those losses. In the dire confusion which has characterized the telegraphic news received this week, one fact stands clearly out, and it may easily be borne in mind by those who, like a correspondent, complain that they cannot tell from the papers which side is winning. It is that the French forces are very little more than a remnant of what they were a month ago, and that the Generals are still trying desperately to bring the fragments together, in the hope that a stand may still be made at Chalons. The Prussian losses, on the other hand, have probably been fully made up by reinforcements, according to the system which we described a few days ago. Prussia is, therefore, still immensely stronger than France, and seems to have the game in her own hands.

The probability seems to be that out of the 370 battalions of infantry which are included in the French Army, no fewer than 300 battalions were sent to the Rhine last month. There is therefore only a small proportion of the regular army left to be drawn upon. A military writer in a foreign journal estimates that "France has not more than 250,000 drilled men at her disposal, while North Germany alone has 350,000." These figures may not be exact, but they doubtless represent very fairly the disproportion which exists between the two Powers. The longer the fighting continues the weaker must the French become. The people demand to be led against the enemy, but it is very doubtful whether arms for them could be found. The entire military system of France seems to have been rotten to the core, while that of Prussia, depending as it does chiefly upon the patriotism of the people, is vigorous and healthy. The French have overrated their own strength and underrated that of their adversaries—precisely the mistake which was made by the Austrians. No other Power in Europe is likely to fall into that error again. Prussia will emerge from the war the terror of all Europe. It is to be hoped that the day will come when she will no longer be a vast training field for armies, and when it will not be necessary to oblige every man in the country to serve as a soldier. After conquering France, Germany could well afford to remain at peace.

"It will be our lot to exhibit Prussia as it were in her last agonies, and to record the dying confessions of her misguided statesmen," said a writer in the Quarterly Review for July, 1815. He was reviewing GENTZ's "Journal of the Last Fourteen Days of the Prussian Monarchy." As we turn over the yellow leaves of an essay which, written when the resuscitation of that Power was but a recent event, ably epitomized the long history of its disasters, the mind draws an involuntary comparison between the Prussia of 1807 and of 1870. The battle of Jena had just laid her prostrate at the feet of NAPOLEON. His troops had virtually annihilated her army, had occupied her cities, and had made her feel all the bitterness of a conquest for which the vacillation of her King and the incompetence of her Generals were alone to blame. Tempted by the prospect of Austria's humiliation, to remain in a state of friendly neutrality toward France, FREDERICK WILLIAM III. had, in spite of the entreaties of his people, his statesmen, and his Queen, that he should declare in favor of Russia and Austria, accepted from BONAPARTE the bribe of Hanover. But, however well this pleased the King, he was destined to find that he could not defy the popular feeling with impunity. The degradation of French vassalage, and the series of insults to which BONAPARTE subjected them, roused the entire nation; and the King, who had delayed action while it might have availed in concert with other Powers, was forced by his subjects into declaring war single-handed against the victor of Austerlitz. The reason given by the Marquis LUCCHESINI, Prussian Minister at Paris, just before the rupture occured, demonstrated the contempt into which his Government had fallen. "The character of Prussia was," he says, "so completely gone that it was vain to attempt any negotiation with the other States of Europe, without some strong demonstration of sincerity on the part of the Prussian Cabinet; and that could only be shown by having recourse in the outset to that expedient with which it would have been desirable to conclude, viz., a recurrence to arms." Thus compelled to take action, the Prussian King found himself within a few months reduced to the possession of a single city and a few square miles of territory, and the star of the House of Brandenburgh had, to all appearance, set forever.

But the Prussia which suffered the disastrous humiliation terminating in the peace of Tilsit was thenceforward destined to enter upon a career of progress such as has but few parallels in the annals of European States. With a spirit worthy of the descendants of those whom the Great FREDERICK had so often led to victory, a feeling of patriotism, and, consequently, of hostility to French influence, arose throughout all Germany, sufficiently strong to unite in the ties of a common interest its various States. Thanks to the far-sighted statesmen who controlled her destinies, Prussia had by the year 1813 resumed her place as one of the "Great Powers" of Europe, and an effective army of nearly 100,000 men was ready to cooperate with the allies in withstanding the power of NAPOLEON. Into the history of the eventful period which followed, terminating in the British and Prussian victory of Waterloo, it is unnecessary to enter. From the proclamation of peace in 1815 until the Schleswig-Holstein question again saw her forces in the field, the interval of nearly forty years was judiciously employed in perfecting that system of military service which, originated by FREDERICK WILLIAM I., improved by FREDERICK the Great, and, disorganized during her time of reverse, remodeled by the genius of her great ministers STEIN and SCHARNHORST, is the undoubted source of Prussia's late successes. It furnished the material which needed but the guiding hand of statesmanship to render it formidable. Without this it was but as the powder in the magazine, the cannon in the arsenal—a gigantic weapon of offense if skillfully used, but otherwise an expensive and inert body of warlike material.

The Prussian military system, codified by the "Law of 3d September, 1814," has been often enlarged upon, but seldom epitomized; and not one-half of those who peruse with unfailing interest the accounts daily published of the great war at this moment convulsing Europe have any clear conception of even its general provisions. The whole of Prussia proper was, in 1733, divided by FREDERICK WILLIAM I. into districts, each of which was bound to maintain the effective strength of a regiment. This was the basis of the Landwehr system, improved by FREDERICK the Great so as to create a miniature but complete army within each province. The amended scheme of 1814 established four bodies, which comprised; 1, a standing army; 2, a Landwehr of the first call; 3, a Landwehr of the second call; and 4, the Landsturm. The standing army was to consist of volunteers of two classes, and of a sufficient number of the youth of the nation called out between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-five, a service of from one to three years being compulsory. The Landwehr of the first call was a militia liable to serve either at home or abroad, in case of war, but in peace time compelled only to undergo such exercise as was necessary for training. It was composed of all young men between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-six not serving in the regular army, of volunteers trained in the light battalions, and of the rest of the population up to their thirty-second year, not having completed twelve years service. The Landwehr of the second call consisted of all who had left the army and the first call, and all other able-bodied men up to forty years of age; while the Landsturm included all men not otherwise allotted up to their fiftieth year, all who had completed Landwehr service, as well as all youths able to carry arms of the age of seventeen. These latter are called out only when the province in which they reside is actually threatened—an eventuality which has never arisen since their organization.

With so all-embracing a scheme of service, applied as it now is to all those States recently absorbed by Prussia, her immense military power is easily understood. Less oppressive, or at all events more popular, than the French conscription, owing possibly to its universality and the general impossibility of providing substitutes, it is more efficient, and seems to appeal more successfully to the patriotic instincts of the people. A comparison of Prussia as she was in 1807, and Prussia as she is in 1870, reflects immense credit upon the administrative ability of her military authorities, impracticable as some details of her system would be under other forms of Government. And this remark holds good, quite irrespective of the result of the present conflict.

The Rationale of Party Reform.

The words of truth and soberness which Ex-Gov. ORR has penned, in explanation and vindication of his purpose to act with the Republican Party in his native State, merit the attention of every thoughtful Southern man. The wisdom that dictates them is not greater than the moral courage which prompts Mr. ORR to separate himself from those who, under the pretext of reforming the Government of South Carolina, make war upon the party which restored the State to the Union, improved its credit, and promoted the interests of its people. The malignants who now assail him as an apostate will live to repent of their folly if they refuse to profit by his sagacity.

Our readers know the position of affairs in South Carolina. Two tickets are before the people—that of the regular Republican organization, and a ticket nominated by a so-called Reform party, which assails the Republican candidates without venturing to challenge the platform on which they stand. This no-party movement does not essentially differ in its scope or plans from movements that are talked of in other parts of the South. It affects friendliness to the national results of the Republican policy, but assails Republican rule in South Carolina. It makes no declaration of war against the party, as a whole, but attacks the character and acts of its representatives in the State. It proposes to reform the party, but in reality aims at its destruction. The dishonesty of these professions is apparent. Mr. ORR shows that they are also hopeless and inexpedient.

For the maintenance of this position it is not necessary to applaud every act of Gov. SCOTT's Administration. Upon this point Mr. ORR speaks plainly. He admits that in some departments of the State Government retrenchment and reform are needed—that "some of its offices are filled by incompetent and corrupt men,"—that "more economy in the appropriation and disbursement of public money should be practiced." What then? The question is not as to the advisability of improvement, but as to the best method of effecting it. The no-party reformers pretend that a new organization, apart from that of the Republicans, is essential—one to which "the good men of all parties" may consistently adhere. The device is as old as partisan trickery, and Mr. ORR discards it like a man. He is zealously for reform, but he would promote it by laboring within the Republican ranks.

The reasons he assigns in support of this view seem to us conclusive. The opposition to that, whatever it be called, is in effect anti-Republican. Its first effect, therefore, will be to render the regular Republican organization more compact than ever. Republicans will feel that the maintenance of its unity and power is more important than aught that is involved in a demand for minor reforms. And the desire to preserve unity will be favorable to the designing and unscrupulous. They will profit by the ardor of party excitement in securing a firmer hold. The probability of reform in these circumstances is less than the probability of increased evil. Besides, as Mr. ORR proves, the South Carolina Republicans, so long as they remain united, will continue to control the State. Nothing that the no-party candidates can say will alienate the colored voters from the Republican Party. They owe to it their political existence, and will stand by it in every emergency.

It is, nevertheless, possible to purge the party of bad influences and make it an instrument for effecting all necessary reforms, and Mr. ORR shows how. "The wise and experienced, in good faith, must go into the Republican Party, acquire a fair and legitimate influence, aid in selecting the most competent and deserving men for official position in the Republican ranks; and when confidence has been attained by good faith and sincerity, then the highest intelligence and virtue will be invoked by the Republican Conventions for services in the offices of trust and responsibility." The rationale of party reform could not be more clearly stated. Energetic, cordial, honest action within the party,—not carping criticism and hostile action outside of it: this is the process which may be advantageously applied elsewhere than in South Carolina. There is room for it in Georgia, where hostility to Gov. BROWNLOW assumes fantastic forms,—in Virginia, where a host of good men prefer conservatism, with a dubious relationship to Democracy, to a practical alliance with Republicans,—and even in New-York, where the indifference of our best citizens has enabled small and worthless creatures to acquire an influence which only ministers to their personal aggrandizement.

Libraries Old and New.

Various causes may be assigned for the fact that our great libraries are still far from being a credit to the nation. Among others must be included the fixed objection to Government appropriations for any purpose lying beyond executive necessities, as also the indisposition of our leading centres of population to smuggle in any single city the implied metropolitan position which making it the depository of national treasures might be supposed to involve. Hence it happens that while England is proud of the possession of the British Museum and the National Gallery, and while France gladly concedes to Paris the privilege of possessing the Louvre and the Imperial Library, it would be impossible to find among us any widely-diffused desire to see any of our great cities hold for the people at large collections worthy of being called national.

The extension of our populated area is likely to increase rather than diminish the sentiment from which this originates, and we must, therefore, look to the exertions of private and corporate liberality for the growth of literary and artistic collections worthy of our marvelous social and material progress. In this City a signal want of unity of purpose has hitherto interfered with the formation of a great and expansive library. We have centres enough round which such a collection might arise, but founded as they all to some extent are on some special and distinctive basis, their development proceeds but slowly, and their prospects of future usefulness are proportionately circumscribed.

A book has been lately published in England which shows, by a history of the origin and progress of the British Museum, how a collection, having its origin in private liberality, may, in time, become a truly universal and popular one. The eccentric and rather parsimonious physician of Chelsea, Sir HANS SLOANE, did not present his collection of books and manuscripts to the British nation as a free gift, but he gave them a property, valued at $250,000, for $100,000. Thus acquired by actual purchase, the possessions which were placed under the care of the Museum Trustees could of course be treated as they thought best. Some of the earlier measures adopted to secure the property against destruction or purloining are curious enough. The public were only to be admitted in parties of ten at a time, and even these were to be broken up in two companies, and were to be limited to an hour's inspection of each department. Somewhat to the surprise, evidently, of the custodians, their fears for the safety of their property, so far at least as the general public was concerned, proved utterly groundless. "Even habitual thieves," they reported, "think it shame to rob that which has been so assiduously and generously gathered and kept for the people's use and pleasure." Certain professional bookworms do not, however, appear to have been so discriminating. The number of annual visitors is stated to have increased from 11,959 in 1805, the first year in which a record was kept, to 575,739 in 1868. In 1759 a corner room, furnished with a wainscot table and twenty chairs, was set apart for readers, and here Dr. JOHNSON, DAVID HUME, and many of their famous contemporaries, repaired for study and reference, and were amply satisfied with the accommodation. About this period the daily average of readers was about six. A hundred years later finds the Museum in possession of its present magnificent reading-room, with a daily average of 354 readers and an annual total of upward of one hundred thousand.

The liberal grants of national money, and the statutory enactments providing copies of all new books, have of course had the chief share in making the library of the British Museum the very comprehensive collection which it is, but a great measure of its success has also been due to the fact of its being managed by a carefully-selected Board as a public trust for the public benefit. Had the founder hampered it with any restrictions originating solely with himself, and calculated to interfere with its thorough usefulness, it would probably have remained SLOANE's library to this day. Anything short of unreserved popular control over such institutions is always likely to interfere with their usefulness, besides preventing that increase from continuous donations which a truly public possession can alone expect or invite. The lesson is one which might be profitably studied by some of our City libraries, which only lack a more liberal and popular style of management to make them the centres of a collection of which the City might be justly proud.

Scientific Pillage.

We all remember what a sensation Mesmerism created when it was first announced. The notion that one man could gain such a mastery over his fellows as to subject their wills entirely to his, and make their mental and muscular motions alike obedient to his wishes, was startling enough. Public exhibitions of the new power were given by its prophets and disciples, and gaping audiences were treated to the spectacle of men and women mesmerized into human jumping-jacks, and moving their arms and legs in blind submission to the will of the operator. In London, if we are not mistaken, there was even founded a school of what was called Phreno-Mesmerism, where pupils were trained in the noble science, and which professed to be able to develop the mental organs of the mesmerized subject one by one in succession. Thus, the patient being put into the magnetic trance, the bump of language was excited, whereupon he burst forth into the midst of an eloquent oration; the bump of combativeness being touched, he became an amateur Sayers or Heenan at once, and so on with the rest. This was only one manifestation of the wide-spread public excitement on the subject of the new discovery, with regard to which the most extravagant possibilities were predicted and believed.

Time, which dissipates so many illusions, has not dealt more kindly with this, and mesmerism has long ago lost the halo of mystery and romance which the vulgar mind had thrown about it. Other novelties have usurped its place; the wonders of spiritualism, and the curious exploits of the DAVENPORTS and HOMES, have cast its miracles into the shade, and nowadays one scarcely ever hears it mentioned. Nevertheless, its professors still live, and some of them, it seems, have discovered a use for the science which its founder certainly never contemplated. Certain gypsies have for some time been encamped in the neighborhood of Rutland, Vt. A few days ago two female gypsies called at the house of a lady in the town with baskets for sale, and observing a small bump on her forehead, offered to remove it. One of them thereupon, we are told, passed her hands over the lady's face, who became for a short time unconscious, and went about all the rest of the day with a strange dizziness in her head. Soon after, she missed a number of spoons, and naturally suspected her gypsy visitors. She therefore procured the services of an officer, and was about to start for the encampment, when the two delinquents, who may be supposed, by virtue of their supernatural power, to have foreseen her intent, marched into the house with a bundle which was found to contain the missing articles, and, explaining that they had borrowed them, went away. Whether the authorities of Rutland have taken pains to instruct these benighted heathen that borrowing spoons without the owner's permission is a grave moral error under the Christian code, we are not informed; but it is fair to suppose that other ladies of Rutland, who are troubled with facial disfigurements and silver spoons, will be more circumspect about their physicians.

If this accomplishment should become generally known, and it seems altogether too valuable to be long buried in the obscurity of Vermont gypsy encampments, we shall all need to tremble for our spoons as we never trembled before. Chloroform, to some extent, one might guard against. Its very unmistakable odor alone would betray its presence. But against that pseudo-Samaritan who approaches us with alluring offers of healing and refreshment, and then with a pass of the hand steals away first our senses, and then our other valuables, what foresight or vigilance will avail? A scientific education will, perhaps, become a pre-requisite for every successful thief—indeed, what with the adaptation of anæsthesia and chemistry to unrighteous ends, that is almost the case now—and violence for purposes of robbery may become superfluous and vulgar. This, of course, will be an advantage. It is better to be mesmerized than garroted; and, in any event, we in New-York cannot well be more defenseless than we are. On the other hand, honest folks may learn to mesmerize as well as the rogues, and so spoil the spoiler. On the whole, then, we await this innovation in thieving with tranquillity, only asking that Superintendent JOURDAN will put his force under the instruction of a complete professor of MESMER's art.

Our correspondent at Paris gives an account of the means by which, as he asserts, two powerful English journals have been moved to take up the cause of the ORLEANS family. It is to be hoped that higher motives than those which are assigned have guided our contemporaries in their course. Mr. DISRAELI once insinuated that the inspirations of the London Times were drawn from "gilded saloons," but so direct a charge as that which our correspondent alleges has been brought against it, has seldom been adduced before. For the honor of our profession we may hope that there is nothing more than rumor in it. Meanwhile, a well-known writer, Mr. VERTEMILE, who was engaged as one of our correspondents at the front, seems to have fallen a victim to the vigilance of the French authorities. The work assigned to correspondents during the war has not, thus far, been of the most agreeable kind. Our correspondent with the Prussian Army has, however, been favored by the King with a special pass, so that we may presume he is out of harm's way.

Three weeks ago the Parisians were complacently speculating on the prospect of the rapid march of their armies to Berlin. Now they are aroused to the startling fact that their beautiful Bois de Boulogne must be cut down to provide for the defense of their own capital. Many of our readers who have spent a pleasant holiday in Paris will regret the sacrifice of the famous "Bois," but how much more deeply must its loss effect the Parisians themselves! Little did they suppose that this was to be one of the early results of the Emperor's declaration of war. The power of France seems to have disappeared like a dream. While the war was confined to the frontier, the Parisians could at least hope that the fortune of war would change. But now that they are called upon to defend their own homes they must begin to share the Emperor's evident dejection when he entered upon the campaign. The restoration of the ORLEANS family would not quite console them for the humiliation they are at present undergoing.

The army of Prince FREDERICK CHARLES seems to have suffered the most severely in the recent engagements. We may or may not credit the statement that the King of Prussia has confessed that this vast body of men is nearly destroyed. But it is evident from Marshal BAZAINE's dispatch that the action on Wednesday cost it dear. It may probably take some time to restore the command of Prince FREDERICK CHARLES to its original strength.

After all the stories which we have received about the flight of the Empress, it turns out that she is still in Paris, busily occupied in making preparations for the succor of the wounded. The Prince Imperial appears to be still with his father. The newsmongers ought to give the Empress a little rest. It may be doubted whether she is the sort of woman to run away at the first approach of danger.

The news this morning shows us how very little dependence is to be placed upon the guess-work of the London Times. That journal positively stated that Marshal BAZAINE was shut up in Metz, and could only hope to obtain arms by capitulating. Today we have a dispatch from the Marshal himself, dated Verdun, Aug. 17. The news from London seems to be altogether less trustworthy even than that which comes from Paris.

Why cannot the Democratic journals conceal their chagrin at the election law recently enacted by Congress? The fact that it implies the exercise of Federal authority in a manner which the other States' Rights men consider unconstitutional, is a fair ground of criticism. But when column after column appears, conceived in the spirit of an angry partisanship, it is impossible not to suspect that the hostility to the law originates less in qualms of conscience about its constitutionality than in dread of its interference with ordinary Democratic plans. There is nothing intrinsically unjust in the law; it interposes no obstacle to the exercise of the franchise by any man entitled to vote; it makes no discrimination in favor of one party and against another; it imposes no penalty upon any one who does not care participate. Whence, then, this violent opposition? Are we to conclude that the Democrats, notwithstanding all their professions, do not want a fair election, and would much rather have no check upon the rascality which has served them so often and so well? Their fury scarcely admits of any other explanation.

We give an abstract of Mr. Speaker BLAINE's speech on accepting a renomination from his constituents. It is what might have been expected—clear, straightforward, and satisfactory. While pointing proudly to the Republican record in connection with the rebellion, Mr. BLAINE dwells most emphatically upon the economical and fiscal reforms which the party have since effected. Unlike Mr. BOUTWELL, he recognizes the wisdom of the policy which has reduced, and would still reduce, taxation. Not a session has passed since the war without some decisive and favorable action upon this subject; and in the promise of further reform and reduction which our circumstances affords, he sees one aspect of his party's justification. The prominence which Mr. BLAINE assigns to these questions indicates a sound estimate of the people's wants. And a sound conception of the direction in which popular sentiment flows.

It must be admitted that, so far, the Democrats have not achieved signal success in their efforts at platform-making. Neither in Maine nor Iowa, neither in Illinois nor Georgia, has any assertive or organizing power manifested itself. The most that can be said in favor of the best of the resolutions that have been propounded is, that they are not as offensive or mischievous as they might have been. The Maine resolution in regard to the reconstructed State Governments is, perhaps, the worst of the lot. The others are, for the most part, vapid and purposeless. The National Administration and the general course of Congress are assailed, with a supreme indifference to truth; but there is no glimpse of a broad, practical policy, nor of the presence of the intellect which in other days rendered the party great. Where specific declarations are ventured upon, they are of a nature that will not win for the party the support of thinking, careful people. In the Thirteenth District of Illinois, for example, resolutions favoring the payment of Five-twenties in greenbacks, the taxation of Government bonds, and the abolition of the national banking system, were adopted. Beyond these marks of the Pendletonian era, Western Democrats do not seem to have advanced.

The Star probably expresses the feeling of the great majority of intelligent and genuine working men when it assails the pretensions of the most conspicuous actors in the Labor Convention at Cincinnati. Experience teaches the same lesson here that it long since taught in the leading labor-centres of Great Britain. They talk most loudly about the rights of labor who are most averse to labor. The professional agitator, though he roars fiercely in behalf of working men, is seldom addicted to work. He finds it more pleasant and vastly more profitable to travel round, make speeches, indite humbug resolutions, and manage things generally. He shines in "management." Are we sketching a common-place demagogue? We are simply portraying the class who seem to abound in the Cincinnati Convention—men who present extravagant and impracticable propositions, and do more harm than good to the cause of honest labor. That needs a judicious championship—not the wild theorizing which has predominated at Cincinnati.

THE WRECK OF THE SCOTLAND.

How the Obstructions were Removed from the Harbor—The Manner and Cost of the Operation.

The Neptune Submarine Company, after nearly two years of labor, have concluded the difficult and perilous feat of removing the wreck of the iron steam-ship Scotland, and the Government engineer having accepted the work the Company has received the final payment due under the contract. As a similar submarine operation has never been before performed, viz., the raising by piece-meal of an iron ship of 4,000 tons burden submerged in the open sea, it may be interesting to give to the public some account of the manner in which this work was accomplished. The Neptune Submarine Company contracted with the United States Engineer Department to remove the wreck for $62,500, the Company to retain all the material and property raised. Operations were commenced at once, and a large schooner with steam hoisting apparatus, having a crew of experienced wreckers, were dispatched to the wreck. It was first proposed to employ nitro-glycerine for blasting purposes, and the manufacture of this explosive agent was begun at Sandy Hook. Subsequently, it being found that the glycerine lost its explosive power when submerged in water of a certain degree of temperature, and very satisfactory experiments being made blasting powder was prepared in the form of torpedoes, the use of nitro-glycerine was discontinued and the powder was substituted.

It had previously been the opinion of scientific engineers and submarine operators that powder would lack the power necessary to rend asunder large beams or plates of iron, while nitro-glycerine, being quicker and more violent in its effect, would cut like a sharp instrument. Experience proved the fallacy of this opinion. Powder when placed upon the surface of submerged objects, and securely confined, has a force ten times greater than under the usual conditions. In commencing operations the Company purchased the powerful derrick steam-propeller, Wm. F. Frazier, and the work was pushed with the utmost vigor, although days and weeks were sometimes lost in consequence of bad weather, it being impossible to work in a rough sea. On the 3d January, 1869, a dreadful accident occurred on the wreck from a premature discharge of a torpedo, and Capt. Wm. R. CHENOWETH, the Superintendent, and three of his men were killed. The work, however, was resumed on the 7th, and continued amid many difficulties until the present month, when after a most minute and rigorous examination, the Government engineers pronounced it finished, a minimum depth of 22½ feet at mean low water being found over the whole wreck. From Capt. SCOTT, agent of the Neptune Submarine Company, we learn that in progress of this enterprise about twenty days have been consumed by the divers under water in placing blocks of powder, of from 25 to 500 pounds each, have been fired by the galvanic battery, and some 2,500 tons have been raised. The iron monster, which for years lay midway in the channel, a terror to our seamen, having caused the destruction of many valuable vessels, and more valuable lives, is at last out of harm's way.

War Upon the Ticket Speculators.

A decided raid was made, last evening, by the Police upon the theatre-ticket speculators, the movements being made upon those who have selected Booth's Theatre as the scene of their operations. Before the dcors opened a large number of the ordinance squad of Police were posted in Twenty-third-street and Sixth-avenue, extending the lines far beyond the house on either side, so that the sidewalk speculators could offer no tickets for sale within a block of the doors. Finding themselves thus completely foiled some of them attempted to dispose of their tickets and the management was entirely successful in the object of having all the patrons of the house purchase their tickets at the box-office. One person who was alleged to be a ticket speculator, appeared at the door with a lady and regular cards of admission, but these having been taken from him he was refused admittance. This statement seems to cause some feeling, but it was slight, and nothing occurred at any time during the evening that could be construed into a breach of the peace, and no arrests were made. Similar steps were taken at Niblo's Garden with like results, the speculators being thwarted by the same quiet tactics which forced their up-town brethren from the field.

JOSIAH TURNER, Jr., editor of the Sentinel, who were brought before him at Salisbury. He also granted a rule against KIRK to show cause why an attachment shall not be granted against him for not making sufficient returns of prisoners that he (BROOKS) has issued writs for, who were hurried to Raleigh to be brought before Judge PRESSON. This rule is returnable at Raleigh on Thursday next. A motion of relevant of the petitioners before Judge PRESSON was granted. When WILEY, one of the Caswell prisoners, was produced, his examination was proceeded with under the bench warrant issued yesterday but was afterward postponed till Monday next, in order to give him time to procure witnesses. He is to be examined on the charge of murder. The correspondence between Judge PRESSON and Gov. HOLDEN has been published. The former places the responsibility of delay upon the latter. The general opinion is that Judge BROOKS' writs only caused the surrender of the prisoners. Judge PRESSON had a long interview with Gov. HOLDEN last night, and the latter dined with the Governor at his hotel today. A grand reception is arranged for Monday, on the conclusion of Rich Mountain Tunnel and railroad in the city.

Engraving the Funding Bonds—The Additional National Currency—Expenses of Mr. Buchanan's and Gen. Grant's Administrations Compared—Mails for France.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—Work upon the bonds authorized by the Funding bill is going steadily forward in the printing and engraving divisions of the Treasury Department. Six registered and four coupon bonds of each series will be issued, all conforming to a general plan but differing in detail. The heads of WASHINGTON, LINCOLN, JEFFERSON, the elder and the younger ADAMS and others of the old familiar faces, will appear upon some of these bonds, and a number of new portraits are being engraved for the same purpose. A full face of THOMAS H. BENTON has been completed. A portrait of BUCHANAN is nearly ready, and those of FARRAGUT, HAWKINS and Gen. ANDREW will also probably be used. The commercial work upon the faces of the bonds is of a peculiar combination of solid and delicate line work, and will be different upon each denomination and series. The backs will also be distinguished by different coloring, and the bonds will be printed upon paper, with a blue silked fibre running through both the bond and coupon, as is that used for the new five-cent fractional currency. Superintendent MACARTHER is now in Philadelphia making arrangements with the manufacturers who are to furnish the paper. All the new bonds will be the engravers a finely-engraved fac-simile of the Capitol instead of the Treasury building as in the old issue.

LABOR CONVENTION.

Action on the Platform—New Resolutions Offered—Proceedings of the Fourth Day.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Aug. 19.—The Labor Congress met at 9 o'clock this morning. Resolutions declaring it to be the duty of the Government to protect every branch of honest industry pursued by its citizens, and that all duties on ship-building materials should be removed, were referred to a committee. A resolution recommending all organizations of productive associations to adopt the eight-hour rule was also referred. The fourth and fifth resolutions of the platform were adopted. An amendment to the sixth resolution that the accumulated wealth of the nation, which is the result of labor already performed, should be taxed on a graduated basis, so as to make the burden of taxation heaviest upon those who have secured to themselves the lion's share of the fruits of American soil, was presented by Mr. COWEN, and warmly discussed. Mrs. HATHAWAY favored the amendment, declaring that it expressed the views of the working women, who are always at the very bottom of the pyramid of oppression that rests upon the laboring classes. Pending the discussion, the Convention adjourned.

The Chair announced that the Labor Amnesty, of Cincinnati, would pay all the debts contracted by the Congress during its session.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

At the opening of the afternoon session Mr. COWEN's substitute for the sixth resolution was lost, and the original resolution adopted. This resolution declares that the burden of taxation should rest equally on all classes and interests, and that the exemption of Government bonds from taxation was a violation of all just principles of the revenue laws. The seventh resolution, declaring that Congress should modify the tariff so as to admit free the necessaries of life, and low duties for the revenue on articles of luxury and on such manufactures as we can produce, was then taken up. The discussion on this resolution was long. Mr. FLANIGAN offered a substitute. The substitute was lost and the original resolution adopted. The eighth resolution was taken up. It declared against the grant of public lands to corporations, or their sale to individuals, and in favor of giving them, free of cost, in quantities not exceeding 160 acres, to actual settlers. Mr. MAGUIRE, of Missouri, offered a substitute, and Mr. PETERS offered a long series of resolutions as an amendment to Mr. MAGUIRE's substitute. Mr. SANFORD offered a substitute for the whole matter, pending the discussion of which the Congress took a recess till evening.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Republican Nomination in the First and Philadelphia Congressional Districts.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 19.—JOHN V. CREELY, who claims to have been defrauded of the Republican nomination for Congress in the Second District, is not content with the decision of the City Executive Committee, which has recognized CHARLES O'NEILL as the nominee. Mr. CREELY from the first denied the right of the City Committee to interfere in the matter, on the ground that any question affecting the Congressional District was State matter, and, therefore, should be referred to the State Central Committee. He accordingly repaired to Altoona, where the State Committee met Tuesday last, and submitted the case to that organization. It sustained him in his claim, and referred the question in contest to the Executive Committee of the General Committee. This body will sit in this city and hear testimony on both sides, after which they will report to the General Committee.

JERSEYTOWN, N. Y., Aug. 19.—The Republican primary meetings have been held in this Assembly District, and result in a large majority of delegates for Hon. POMEROY SHELDON for Congress.

Long Island.

The following persons have been mentioned as Democratic candidates for member of Assembly from Suffolk County: Hon. R. D. SLEIGHT, present incumbent; Col. JOHN L. GARDINER, Hon. R. W. PEARSALL and MILTON SMITH, Esq.

The Republicans seem to have settled upon Hon. GEORGE F. GERMAN, formerly Collector of the First District, for candidate for Assembly.

The Democratic candidate for Sheriff will either be JESSE COWLES or C. H. VAUGHN.

The only Democrat at present named for County Clerk is the present incumbent, STEPHEN C. ROGERS.

The name of J. H. PERKINS has been mentioned as Republican candidate for Sheriff.

GENERAL NOTES.

Mr. GEORGE W. MINIER, of Tazewell County, Ill., declines the temperance nomination for the Eighth Congressional District.

PHILANDER J. CARLTON has been nominated by the Democracy from the Fifth Congressional District of Maine. His opponent, Mr. HALE, had a majority of 4,000 votes in 1868.

The following dispatch has been received from Gainesville, Fla.: "JOSIAH L. WALLS, colored, was nominated for Congress, and SAMUEL T. DAY, loyalist, for Lieutenant-Governor."

Gen. COBURN, of the Fifth Indiana Congressional District, who is actively engaged canvassing, personally reports that the best of feeling prevails everywhere, and that the Republicans are confident of success. His majority in 1868 was 1,023.

The Boston Post says that the fact of the Democratic State Convention being ordered, this year, at a later day than usual, will afford no reason why local organizations of the party should be delayed.

The Trenton State Gazette says: "The contest between the negro-hating and the negro-vote-loving wings of the New-Jersey Democracy which has so distracted the nice-laid plans of the powerful aristocratic Ring, and left the party in this State in a condition of bewildering uncertainty, is now agitating Democratic circles all throughout the country."

The Indianapolis Journal says that it has transpired, in the light of official reports, exhibited the Democracy of Indiana as the most profligate party ever intrusted with the conduct of public affairs. Its entire record, for the last four years of its power, is one of fraud, peculation and defalcation, unrelieved by a single honest or prudent act of legislation or executive management.

The Philadelphia Press says that the Republicans of the interior are manifesting an unusual interest in the coming campaign, although no State or national ticket is to be voted for this Fall. "All the indications are that the party in the good old Keystone State was never in better condition or more confident of victory. The rural Democracy have no new arguments, and are relying solely upon their old party cry of a 'white man's Government.'"

The Culpeper Address says: "We in Virginia are in no condition at present to demand the immediate restoration of the ancient order of affairs. We cannot receive a sufficient support and co-operation from the Democratic Party of the North to effect the change at once by the defeat of the Republican Party, and unless it could be accomplished by some means the failure would entail upon us a list of woes unknown even in the history of North Carolina."

The Raleigh (N. C.) Standard says that an examination of the recent election returns must convince the leaders, as well as the rank and file of the Republican Party, that a little more hard work would have resulted in a victory instead of a defeat. "We have lost some counties by bare majorities, while others have gone by default entirely. The necessity of a thorough reorganization is apparent. Plans are on foot to effect it. By this time next year we can be able to mass our entire forces once more for any sacrifice."

The Washington Chronicle regrets to learn that an attempt is being made to transplant the practices of men who oppose the Republican Party in the Southern States, to that city. Mr. BROWN, nominated for Commissioner in the Ellis Ward, a few days since, had a portion of his house pelted, and received a letter warning him of fire vengeance if he did not discharge an assistant named CLARK. Mr. CLARK has not only had his house pitched, but has had several barrels and cows poisoned. One, at least, of the city officials elected on the Ring ticket has been threatened for conscientiously voting in the interest of the Republican Party.

Mr. C. W. POTWIN has been nominated as the Republican candidate for Congress from the Thirteenth Ohio District. The district is at present represented by Mr. G. W. MORGAN.

The Pittsburg Gazette says that Hon. D. J. MORRELL, of Cambria County, Penn., will receive the Republican nomination for Congress. He has little or no opposition. "Such men are worthy the great confidence reposed in them."

The Elmira Advertiser of the 17th inst. says that Mr. B. N. LOOMIS, of Binghamton, is likely to receive the recommendation from the Democratic politicians and the appointment from Gov. HOFFMAN of County Judge of Broome County, in place of Judge GRISWOLD, deceased. A meeting of the Democracy of that county, to take definite action on the subject, will be held on Saturday of this week.

The Scranton, Penn., Republican says: "The Democratic Party of today is particularly anxious that the history and record of the two great parties during the past decade should not enter into the ensuing campaign—in short, that it should be forgotten. This is not unnatural, though positively unreasonable. That the Democratic Party should desire to forget its record is not to be wondered at, for its works during the war, and since, constitute the crowning shame and infamy of its existence."

Hydrophobia—An Affecting Case—A Woman and Three Children Bitten by a Rabid Cur.

The St. Louis Republican of a recent date says: "The family of Mr. ROBERT D. COURT, residing at Benton, Mr and a half miles out on the Pacific Railroad, have met with a most heart-rending affliction. About four weeks ago Mrs. COURT and three of her children were bitten by a little dog, the pet of the family. Some days previous the brute had a fight with other dogs in the vicinity and was severely used. He showed symptoms of illness, but they were attributed to this fight. A day or two after he had bitten the members of the family, Mr. COURT, although not believing that the animal was affected by hydrophobia, killed him. A physician was consulted, and a mad stone was applied to the places where the dog's teeth had lacerated the skin, but the mad stone failed to take hold or have any effect upon them. Believing that all danger had passed, Mr. and Mrs. COURT last week went on a visit to a point near Kalamazoo, Mich., leaving their children in the care of a competent person. On Sunday the children were brought to the city and attended church. On returning home, MOLLIE, the youngest, six years old, complained of a pain which manifested to paroxysms. The bite of the child was called to the minds of friends with frightful distinctness. Drs. GARRETT and REYNOLDS were called in, and they pronounced it a case of hydrophobia. At intervals during Sunday night little MOLLIE was afflicted with spasms, or fits. The medical gentlemen and friends and neighbors labored and prayed with desponding anxiety. While the spasms lasted, the little one, as if by Divine interposition, was rendered unconscious of her sufferings, as her reason suffered by detachment. Yesterday morning, during the intervals of the paroxysms, she was perfectly sane, and with the judgment of a person of adult years, comprehended her terrible situation, and talked calmly about it. She bade those around her goodbye, sent goodbyes to her papa and mama, who were far away from her in her time of trial, and resigned herself to her fate. The little child died in Christendom were not worth a life like this. May God yet save her to those who love and cherish her! Her death was anticipated during the day. We have no advices since yesterday morning. The other two children, CHARLIE and ELLA, are in the bloom of health, and it is believed and hoped that they will not be similarly affected."

For the ladies he has an excellent periodical, entitled The Mildner and Dressmaker, copiously illustrated, and Le Bons Monde—both containing useful patterns. The counters of Mr. BRENTANO'S store are now covered with new publications.

The friends of the Midnight Mission are respectfully reminded that the work is going on vigorously during the Summer, when "everybody is out of town." The house is remarkably full; encouraging reports are being received from many who have been rescued and placed beyond danger. Nothing which, at present, is coming in is more current expenses, which, under the most rigid economy, amount to over $300 per month, and have to be paid by somebody.

Reader, wherever you may be, will you not contribute $1 or more to the "Summer fund?" Address FRANK J. SMITH, Treasurer, Advertisement. No. 26 Nassau-st., New-York.

Two or three Colds in succession will, with many constitutions, scarcely exhibit the seeds of Consumption in the system, thus converting what originally was a simple, curable affection, into one generally fatal. While ordinary prudence, therefore, suggests the necessity of at once taking care of a Cold until it is got rid of, intelligent experience unanimously proclaims a remedy in Dr. D. ST. CLAIR FLATS CANAL.

Letter from Col. Cram, of the United States Engineers—The Doubt About the Location of the Canal—Reply of a Canadian Newspaper.

As the precise location of the St. Clair Flats Canal has been considered doubtful, the following letter from Col. CRAM, of the United States Engineers, will be read with interest, as will also the reply of a Canadian paper, which we also publish:

CRAM.
UNITED STATES ENGINEER'S OFFICE,
IMPROVEMENT ST. CLAIR FLATS,
DETROIT, Mich., July 22, 1870.

To Brevet Major-Gen. A. A. Humphreys, Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers:

SIR: In reply to the letter from your office of the 2d inst., transmitting one from the honorable Secretary of the Treasury to the honorable Secretary of War, (herewith returned to you,) relative to the location of the new ship-canal across the St. Clair Flats, I have the honor to report:

1. When I submitted my first report, with plans for this work, Aug. 15, 1868, I was under the impression that it would be in Canadian waters. But soon after submitting that report I was officially informed, by a letter from Superintendent (Gen. W. F. RAYNOLDS) of the Lake Survey, whom I had invited to read the report, that I was in error on this point, and that the boundary between Canada and the United States ran to the eastward of the contemplated location. I immediately transmitted this note to the Chief Engineer, and requested it to be made a part of my report, as it would explain my reasons for the consideration of the canal by Congress. Upon the United States waters, and then removing all objection that might arise on account of a supposed location in Canadian waters, and obviating the question of boundary, I then proceeded to study the question of location. This note from Gen. RAYNOLDS was made a part of my report.

2. The question of the adoption of the new canal was the subject of much discussion in Congress, and finally, on March 3, 1869, making another appropriation for the work. In this act Congress provided that it should be constructed and kept at least 200 feet in any one reach. December 13, 1869, which was more than a year from the date of my report, Congress, upon the joint report of the Chief Engineer, and myself, in official communications to the Hon. Secretary of War (Mr. BELKNAP,) in substance that the canal should be built in Canadian waters, and with Mr. Chief Engineer's letter to me (March 12, 1869) directing me to proceed with the construction, a copy of that statement was transmitted to me. Accordingly I located the work upon the ground, and made the plans which I submitted to be, and where Congress decided it should be, leaving the boundary to the eastward of the entire work as contemplated in the Chief Engineer's report. It may be said, however, that not all the land of the work the boundary, as laid down on an official map I have since seen, comes very near to the upper end of the cut dike. It is certainly distant from the dike eastward and increasing in distance from and to the eastward of that dike, as we come further into Lake St. Clair. Not a particle of the canal nor of the banks are at all in the river, but all is wholly in the lake. When I made my first report, I could not readily obtain an official map with the boundary marked across those flats which are in the lake. It was governed by a vessel track on an ordinary map, which I could not tell might be a boundary line, but which I afterward discovered was not.

3. I have not the slightest doubt of the correctness of Gen. RAYNOLDS' opinion, nor the accuracy of the statement of Hon. Chief Engineer, Hon. Secretary, nor of the accuracy of the marking of the boundary on the official map already referred to. The maps of Michigan and Canada, which misled me, are not to be trusted. In this connection I think the honorable Secretary of the Treasury may rest assured that the canal and its embankments are wholly within our own waters, and within the jurisdiction of the United States. I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. J. CRAM, Colonel Engineers,
Brevet Major-General U. S. A.

REPLY OF THE CANADIAN PAPER.

In reply to the foregoing letter, the Chatham Planet says: "We will just ask Gen. CRAM how it was, if the newly-constructed canal is not in Canadian waters and within the Canada boundary line as established by Commissioners BARCLAY and PORTER, that up to 1854 the course of vessels passing to and from the month of the River St. Clair was through the north channel, and remained so until an American deputation waited upon the Canadian Government in 1855, and induced our authorities to grant the sum of $30,000, which was passed by an order in council, on the 4th day of April of that year, toward deepening the South or Walpole Channel—usually denominated the Old Ship Canal—the United States Government the following year voting $45,000 in money, and the use of a dredging machine and scows, which rendered the appropriation equivalent to $80,000, or $70,000 in all? In 1857 the projected work was prosecuted under the United States Government engineers, and was not completed until August, 1858. On the west side of this channel, the United States Government put their light-house and other buildings, because that side of the channel was theirs, and the east side belonged to Canada. No one at that time had any doubts as to the channel being the dividing line between Upper Canada and the State of Michigan. That was the South Channel—the Old Ship Channel—as denominated by Messrs. BARCLAY & PORTER. Now, however, the United States seek to abandon both the North Channel and the Old Ship Channel, for a new channel or canal—for there is no channel where the canal now is, until Mr. JOHN BROWN dredged one—and extending from the eastside of the south channel in a direct line south, through Canadian waters and land to deep water in Lake St. Clair, still to the east of the defined boundary line. Why our Government says—accepting, we suppose, Messrs. BARCLAY and PORTER's report—that south of Walpole Island forms part of the boundary line, and if this be so, we cannot understand the delay on the part of the Canadian officials to say so, and act accordingly. Gen. CRAM's report is weak and altogether specious. It evades the question altogether. It does not state where the old ship canal is; neither does it inform us whether the channel improved in 1858 and 1859 by the joint appropriations of the Canadian and United States Governments was then considered to be the boundary line—was the real and only South or Walpole Channel through which vessels could pass into Lake St. Clair from River St. Clair."

IN A TRANCE.

A Man About to be Buried Alive—He is Awakened by the Fall of the Coffin Lid.

The Detroit Free Press publishes quite a lengthy account about a man named HART, who was recently awakened from a trance at Great Barrington, Mass. On the 12th ult., says the Press, "HART sat with his family and some neighbors on the verandah of his residence, conversing together at times, and again listening to the voice of a young lady who was singing and playing upon an accordion. HART had felt unusually well all day, and his appearance was so much more favorable as to have been a subject of congratulation among those present. Gradually, as the young lady sang, a curious feeling came over him as he sat in a rocking chair, with his limbs stretched out at length over a stool. He describes the feeling to have been like the strange numbness that is felt when a member of the body "gets asleep," which all of us have experienced, only the feeling seemed to start first around the heart, spreading thence all over the body. There was no pain, no alarm, but the sensation was rather agreeable, as it seemed to modify all the sharp notes of the song, every word of which could be distinctly heard by HART. After the song he heard the words of admiration expressed, and was able to make an effort to shake off the stupor when the white column of the verandah just in front of him grew dimmer and dimmer, until it faded away in the mist, and then the man's eyelids fell, and he thought to himself that he was going to sleep. Instead, he commenced to think more rapidly than before; and to feel that he ought to start right up; the voices did seem die away, and he heard the farewell words of a woman who took her leave.

As she went, the group arose to go into the house, Mrs. HART approaching her husband with a "Come, JOHN, let's go in." He could not move; his whole body felt as if asleep, and no exertion of strength or will could stir a finger. Seeing that he did not move, the wife laid her hand on his shoulder, shook him slightly, and repeated: "Come, JOHN, we are going to bed." He tried to move, realizing that he tried to, but he was like a stone, only feeling that he lived and that he knew all that was transpiring around him. "JOHN's really gone off into a nap," said the wife to the others who stood near, at the same time shaking him, and then she playfully seized the chair by the back and pulled it part way over, thinking that the fear of the fall would wake him. As the chair tipped, HART's body fell over the arm to one side, falling as would a bag of sand, his head striking heavily against BENTLY, his brother-in-law, who had approached. The group immediately became alarmed, feeling of his heart, dashing water into his face, and Mrs. HART commenced crying, saying that she believed JOHN was dead. They picked him up, carried him into the bedroom, where his slippers and clothing were quickly removed. HART heard every word. Every one what they did, but every feeling except that in his brain was benumbed, and he could not even tell when his garments were taken off, so numb and unfeeling was his flesh. While his wife and sister were getting blankets, hot water and the like, BENTLY ran to the gate and sent a boy for the doctor; and HART, through the open window, distinctly heard the words, "Tell him not to lose a single minute." The women were both weeping and lamenting, the wife reproaching herself for fancied carelessness, and BENTLY tried to cheer her up, saying that it was a fit of some kind, which the doctor would soon throw off. HART did not care much, feeling to himself that it would all turn out a funny joke that they could laugh over; nor was he frightened when the doctor, after feeling of his pulse, his heart, and trying in vain to open the fast-closed mouth, told BENTLY that the man was dead of heart disease, and that he could not earth could raise him. Perhaps all of us have heard the sudden words that are uttered around the couch of the dead and dying, and have ourselves felt the cutting grief that comes of seeing the light of life fade out of the body and soul of a dear friend, and there is no need to tell of the scene around this bed. After a time, BENTLY went away, and when he came back, HART realized that a man came with him to measure "the corpse" for his coffin. Soon after seven men came in, "the body" was removed to the parlor, a table was drawn out, a board brought in, and the living dead was washed and wrapped in a sheet. To show how active the mind was in the dead body, HART stated that when the table was drawn out, one of the castors caught and tore a hole in the carpet, the sound and the result particularly impressing itself on his mind. After the body was laid out Mrs. BENTLY came in, and there was whispering and talk about a shroud, and other ladies came, and it was finally decided to enshroud the corpse in a suit of black, a new suit, and the very suit that the man had on as he related these facts! The man put the clothing on the corpse, lifting it this way and that, and a man on one of the small was noticed and spoken of.

And then there was a change in the feelings of the man. He knew that he was laid out, that his coffin was making, that the windows had been opened and two men were "watching," talking in low tones over the sudden death, and one of them related a similar incident that he had heard of. As the train began to moan, the voices died away, to be succeeded by the sounds from the street came fainter, and the dead man felt as if swinging in the air, and at least he remembered nothing more. There was no dream, no more feeling or thinking. Did you ever wake up quietly, of your own accord, and yet lie still, your eyes open and seeing, but yet so sleepy and lazy that you did not care to move, and desired to remain so, without any harsh noise breaking the quiet spell? Well, HART awoke just in this way. There was no sudden shock, no warning voice, but the eyes opened, the soul resumed its feeline, the death-sleep was over, and he was resting on his back, on his "dead bed," knew not how long he was in that state, and that his awakening was so usual. He missed his wife and thought to himself that she had crept softly out to let him have a morning nap. He heard a cow bell tinkle, heard boys shouting, and sounds about the house, and thought how curious it all was, he believed it was not yet night, owing to the cloth over his face, which shut out the light, but the presence and stillness had not yet been realized. As he lay there, just struggling out of the stupor, HART heard slow and heavy steps approaching; they came into the hall, through the dining-room, into the parlor, close up to him, and there was an exclamation and a fall, and the dead man sat up on his board. It was the accidental fall of his coffin which had started him up.

Sing-sing: Suicide—A Hypochondriac Shoots Himself.

The Concord (N. H.) Patriot of the 17th inst. gives details of the suicide of a hypochondriac in that city on the previous day: PATRICK KAINE, an unmarried Irishman, in the employ of Mr. JOS. B. WALKER, was found lying in a pool of blood in an out-house. He had shot himself in the centre of the forehead with a six-barreled revolver, the ball passing obliquely to the top of the spine, and inflicting a wound which must cause death, probably before evening, from bleeding on the brain. The revolver, with all its barrels loaded but one, was lying on the bureau in the room, together with a letter in the handwriting of the suicide, without an envelope, address or signature. At 10 o'clock this morning the wounded man retained consciousness and could talk some, but not correctly. His pulse was little over thirty and failing. In the letter he bids adieu to the world; wishes that he had never been born; life miserable; love for his relatives; no hard feelings against any mortal; bequest of $100 to Rev. J. E. BARRY, the rest of his property to be divided among relatives, the nearest being cousins.

KAINE has always been a temperate, industrious man; has accumulated about $1,000. He has been in Government service, but not as a soldier, and had the revolver with which the dash act was committed at that time. The cause which led him to self-destruction is clearly hypochondria, he having labored long under an apprehension that he had a heart complaint which might cause him to drop dead any moment. Last Sunday he talked freely about the suicide, and awakened apprehension on all sides that he would make way with himself.

Suicide of a Boy—A Threat Carried Out.

The Troy Times of the 18th inst. says: NORMAN SHAW, a son of LUERNE SHAW, of Hoffmeyer, Saratoga County, committed suicide yesterday afternoon by hanging himself. His disposition was wayward, and he was quite frequently punished by his parents for his offenses. This treatment he brooded over, and yesterday afternoon, after he had been guilty of some infraction of his father's rules, for which his mother threatened to have him punished, he went off alone remarking "I'll put myself where my mam's punished me." A few hours afterward he was found on the floor of the wagon house. He had procured a piece of rope, which he tied to a beam, but the rope must have broken after he had strangled himself, as he was found on the floor as before stated. Young SHAW was about thirteen years of age.

VENEZUELA.

Attempt of the Rebel Leaders to Attack the Blockade—A Prussian Gun-Boat Assists them in the Undertaking—Protest of the Venezuelan Government.

From Our Special Correspondent.

MARACAIBO, Friday, July 22.

A high-handed proceeding has lately been perpetrated at Laguayra by Commander E. KNORR, of the Prussian gun-boat Meteor, in obedience to the dictates of the rebel leader GUZMAN BLANCO and his Ministers, at Caracas, who are not acknowledged by any leading Power, and who hold only one or two places. In accordance with the order of Gen. HERRERA[illegible], who is at present at the head of affairs in the name of the Monagas Government, the ports of Laguayra and Porto Cabello were recently declared in a state of blockade, and the Venezuelan man-of-war Mapavari was ordered to cruise near the mouth of these ports, and at all hazards to maintain the blockade, which was rendered more effective by the presence of a fleet under the command of HERRERA[illegible], a state of affairs which was not only well known throughout this Republic, but must also have been known to Commander KNORR. At 7½ o'clock in the morning of the 16th, the Mapavari, while cruising near the entrance to Laguayra, sighted a steamer carrying the French colors. She instantly fired a gun for the steamer to lay to. Instead of obeying the order the steamer continued on and succeeded in getting into the port of Laguayra. She afterward proved to be one of the French mail line of steamers. Very soon after, the Mapavari discovered a steamer coming out of Laguayra having a flag of truce at her foretop. This proved to be the North German gun-boat Meteor. The Mapavari moved forward to meet her, and when within hailing distance a boat was lowered from the Meteor and an officer from her came on board the Mapavari, bearing a note couched in the following terms:

ON BOARD THE METEOR, July 16, 1870.

To the Commander of the Mapavari:

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I have received positive orders from the Diplomatic Corps of Caracas to protect the vessels of all nations in their entrance to or sailing from this port with the exception of such vessels as sail under the Venezuelan flag, and to repel by force any attempt made to prevent vessels plying between this port and the Republic entering or leaving this port. In making this communication I have the request you will transmit the same to the commanders of vessels sailing under your flag. Begging you to favor me with a report of whatever resolution you may come to, I have the honor to be, &c., &c.

E. KNORR, Commander.

On reading this extraordinary note of the commander of the Meteor, the officer in command of the Mapavari naturally thought there were some neutral rights which should be respected by other nations, and he consequently declined committing himself to a written reply until he had communicated with his superior officer, and contented himself with sending to Commander KNORR a verbal answer, which, however, the German officer declined to accept. Returning to his Meteor, the officer reported the result of the interview, and was, in consequence, immediately dispatched with the following note:

ON BOARD HIS PRUSSIAN MAJESTY'S STEAMER METEOR, July 16, 1870.

To the Commander of the Mapavari:

SIR: As you have given notice of your resolution not to take into consideration the action of the Diplomatic Corps, made known to you in my note of today, I hereby declare your vessel attacked, and demand your surrender within five minutes from receipt hereof. Otherwise, I shall take your vessel by force.

E. KNORR, Commander.

In reply to this, the commander of the Mapavari said that he would immediately report to his chief the action of the commander of the North German steamer, but he positively refused to lower his flag, saying "that the Mapavari should be sunk with all on board before such a dastardly act should be committed." This answer was conveyed to the Meteor, which immediately steamed within gunshot of the Mapavari, and hauling down the white flag, made preparations to attack her. The commander of the Mapavari then sent a boat with an officer to the Meteor, demanding an explanation of such unheard of course of procedure on the part of a neutral vessel. The answer of Commander KNORR was peremptory: that the Mapavari should hoist the colors of nations immediately, and that any vessel found blockading that port would be sunk by him. He stated further that the interests of the foreigners at Laguayra was suffering severely from the existing disturbances, and his orders from the Diplomatic Corps were positive to break up any attempted blockade. With this intelligence the Mapavari immediately left to report to Gen. HERRERA[illegible], who at once dispatched his Secretary, Dr. RAMON MONTILLA FREGAMES, Col. TEMBO BARRIAL and Col. HARRELLA, a German, to Laguayra, with instructions to protest against such action on the part of the Diplomatic Corps, and to represent to the commander of the Meteor that such acts as he contemplated were contrary to the spirit and text of the neutrality laws of nations, which he was bound to respect. He submitted that belligerents had a right to blockade any part of a country in which war was being carried on, and that no neutral Power ought to interfere other than to protect the just rights of their own subjects, as positively defined by the established laws governing all nations. Further, if the commander of the Meteor persisted in the course he had indicated, he, Gen. HERRERA[illegible], should feel as incumbent on him to confiscate all the property of the Germans within his jurisdiction to indemnify his Government for the consequence of the action of the commander of the Meteor in opposing a party whose sole intention was the breaking up of a rebellion headed by the President de Venezuela, the final triumph of which could not but lead to the total ruin of that fine but unfortunate Republic.

Stock-Jobbing by Telegraph—The Reported Illness of Commodore Vanderbilt a Canard.

The announcement which was made in the morning papers yesterday that Commodore VANDERBILT had been seized with an apoplectic fit at Saratoga and was in imminent danger, created considerable excitement on the "street" until it was positively contradicted, and had the effect of reducing the price of stocks controlled by the Commodore from 2½ to 3½ per cent. The stocks immediately rallied when it was ascertained that there was no foundation for the rumor, so that the effect of the false news was of brief duration. The statement was pronounced a stock-jobbing canard. Those concerned in it must have made considerable money while the excitement lasted, for the stocks of roads in which Mr. VANDERBILT is interested were very lively for a little while. The Commodore came down from Saratoga yesterday afternoon.

The following telegram nails the falsehood and gives hope that the author of it will be discovered:

TROY, N. Y., Aug. 19.—Last night a fraudulent telegram was delivered at the Western Union Office in this city, addressed to the Associated Press, stating that Commodore VANDERBILT had been stricken with apoplexy at Saratoga, and was lying at the point of death. The dispatch purported to have been sent by W. E. KISSELLBURGH, city editor of the Troy Times. Mr. KISSELLBURGH did not send the telegram and knows nothing whatever of its origin. The proprietors of the Troy Times will endeavor to learn who perpetrated the forgery.

W. E. KISSELLBURGH, Troy Times.

German Republican Central Committee.

The German Republican Central Committee of this City held their regular monthly meeting at the Steuben House, last evening, Mr. S. MAUSENIUS, the President, in the chair, and Mr. G. BEYERLE Secretary. Mr. J. SCHOENHOW, from the Correspondence Committee, made a report about a platform on the leading political topics of the day, to be submitted to the coming Republican State Convention as the sentiment of the German Republicans of this City. The platform was discussed at length, but only two planks—one approving the present Administration, and especially its financial measures, and the other favoring funding the national debt—were adopted. It was resolved to refer the platform back to the Correspondence Committee, increased by three members, and to have it discussed by the Executive Committee before it is reported again to the Central Committee. The meeting then adjourned.

GERMAN PATRIOTIC FESTIVAL.

Grand Entertainment at Jones' Wood for the Benefit of Wounded Soldiers and the Widows and Orphans of the Slain—Speeches, Theatrical Performances, Music, Dancing and Fireworks.

The great German patriotic festival, which has been in preparation for some days past, in aid of the wounded soldiers and of the widows and orphans of the dead, fallen in fighting the battles for the unity of the fatherland, took place, yesterday afternoon and evening, in Jones' Wood. There appears to have been a difference of opinion among the German residents of this City as to the propriety of holding a festival of this character at this time, many of the more earnest and sober-minded Germans preferring that the contributions for the benefit of their suffering countrymen should be made directly through the organized channels, and without the feasting and drinking accompaniments incident to a public entertainment of this kind. Owing to this fact and the rather lukewarm support which the proposed festival received from leading representative Germans of the City, the attendance was not as large as the projectors of the entertainment anticipated, or as it would otherwise have been. A large number of tickets are said to have been sold, however, that were not represented in person on the ground, so that the festival may have been a pecuniary success, notwithstanding the slim attendance. The Committee of Arrangements, who had the affair in charge, of which Gen. HEINTZELMAN was President, certainly did their part toward making the entertainment both successful and brilliant. The preparations for the fête were on an extensive scale, and the details were carried out in a manner creditable to the Committee. The decorations of the grounds were appropriate and in good taste. The building in the centre of the Park was surrounded with the flags of the North German and the United German States and encircled with wreaths of oaken leaves, while around its base were inscribed the names of the recent battle-fields made glorious by German valor—"Saarbrücken," "Wörth," "Forbach," "Spicheren," "Metz," "Marsal," "Worth," "Frœschweiler" and "Bitche." Belvidere Hall, the scene of the greater part of the entertainment, was very elaborately decorated for the occasion. Crimson drapery, with gold trimming, hung in festoons around the entire hall, while the German flags—the black, white and red, and the black, red and gold—were peeled from all the columns, alternating with the American Stars and Stripes. Over the musicians' stand, at the south end of the hall, stood colossal figures of the German and American Goddess of Liberty, while on the opposite end of the hall was a large painting of the German Goddess with drawn sword. The speakers' platform, which also served as the musicians' stand, was surrounded by a broad drapery of blue velvet trimmed with silver fringe, and the entire decorations were rich and tasteful, and in the evening, when the hall was lighted up, presented a most brilliant appearance.

The visitors were mainly the middle class of Germans, with their wives and families, began to assemble on the grounds about 3 P. M., and from that time until the opening of the exercises, about 4½ P. M., occupied their time in strolling about the grounds, imbibing their favorite beverage, listening to the excellent music of Eisfeld's Band, and discussing the thrilling war news from fatherland. All of them, women men and alike, appeared to be animated with the same patriotic zeal for the unity of their native land, and expressed a firm confidence in the final success of the German arms, and, as the result thereof, the ultimate union of all German states, peoples and tribes.

The following was the programme of the festival: Gen. HEINTZELMAN, who was received with cheers, called the assemblage to order at the hour stated above, and in a brief speech said that it was a duty of charity that both the German wounded soldiers and the bereaved families of German soldiers dumb on the present European war be aided and supported. Mr. S. HAUSENO then delivered the oration. He spoke about the former political dismemberment of Germany as the cause of her political weakness. That the state of affairs had been changed within a short space of time. The Germans had been respected in foreign lands before because his native country had not protected him as long as he had been its citizen. This had been changed by the erection of the North German Union, and henceforth after the war, in consequence of the German Union accomplished by it, a German would be quite as much respected abroad as the citizens of other powerful civilized nations. Now it was time for the Germans not to make any distinctions among themselves any more as to whether they had been born in Hanover, Saxony, Hesse, Wurtemberg, Bavaria, Austria or Prussia. This Republic, the greatest and most powerful one in existence, and England herself, also derived their origin from the Germanic race. It was therefore quite natural that all true Americans and all true sons of Great Britain should rejoice that the Germans they liked to call "fatherland," because it had been the country also of their ancestors, was throwing off her former political dismemberment and weakness, and was rising to become a power of first rank. Despotism and Cossacism were not possible in a united Germany, but Germany united would of necessity become also a free country. A German Union meant self-government of the German people. The American, English, and German peoples were constituting the Germanic world, and representing rational liberty. The Germanic nations had to fulfill the mission, to remove brutal force, from being the highest umpire in the affairs of mankind. Cheers were called for by the speaker, at the close of his address, and loudly given by the audience, for America, the old German fatherland, Bismarck, the German commanders and warriors. After this band had played several pieces, and among them the Prussian national air, "Wer ist's Deutsche Vaterland?" "The Guard on the Rhine," and a jubilee overture by C. M. VON WEBER, a poem was recited by Miss WILHELMINE RHODE, an actress of the German Stadt Theatre of this City. The poem, in glowing colors, painted a picture of united Germany, after she shall have come out victorious from the present war. After which the fire-works were displayed, and under the oak trees in the Park, SCHILLER's drama of "Wallenstein's Camp" was performed by the actors of the German Stadt Theatre. This play represents camp-life in the German Thirty Year's war, by a singular coincidence which was concluded 182 years, yesterday, (1648), by the so-called Westphalian treaty of peace. The festival was concluded with dancing at the Belvidere. The following were the members of the Executive Committee: Messrs. S. Huburger, Chairman; Emil Von Trentins, Secretary; C. Edelheim, S. Herzberg, Adolphus Caimann, M. B. Leverson, H. M. Smith, J. Heimendinger, J. Lilienthal, floor managers.

"DIVORCE WITHOUT PUBLICITY."

Two More Cases in the Courts—Justice for Injured Wives.

CHARLES STOKES, Jr., a physician of this City, was married in the Spring of 1869 to ANNIE JANE, the daughter of a wealthy farmer living in the vicinity. In a few months he tired of her, having been captivated by the attractions of another woman. He went to one of the offices where "shyster" divorces are "procured without publicity." An action was commenced in September, 1869, and on Nov. 2 a divorce was obtained. The wife knew nothing of it until she heard that her husband was living with the other woman, to whom he had been slanderously married immediately after the divorce was granted. There had been no service upon her, and upon looking at the judgment-roll no such person as the one swearing to have served it could be found. The testimony as to the acts of adultery claimed was most meagre and indefinite, and the places of their alleged commission did not exist. The person purporting to have been a prominent intimate with Mrs. STOKES could not be found, or any one bearing his name. The witness to the adultery was an ex-convict named WILLIAM GARDNER, alias James Purson. Upon the facts being brought before him, Judge BARNARD, in December last, promptly set aside the decree as fraudulent and void, and allowed the wife to interpose an answer denying the allegations against her, and charging adultery on the part of the husband. The referee reported in favor of the wife, and Judge BARNARD, yesterday, granted her a divorce, thus leaving the second wife in an unfortunate predicament. Her friends threaten summary vengeance upon her deceiver.

Judge BARNARD also rendered a decision, yesterday, in the somewhat similar case of MARY E. MCGOWAN st. JOHN MCGOWAN. MARY had procured a divorce from her husband by the same "patent" process as in the other case, and the Court set aside the decree, with costs.

Special Meeting of the Newark City Council.

A special meeting of the Newark City Council was called last night for the purpose of ratifying the recent changes made in the Fire Department, but as the changes were of a partisan character a Democratic majority was necessary in the Board, and in the absence from the city of Aldermen SCHICKHAUSS and LITTELL the ratification did not take place.

A resolution that a committee be appointed to revise the city charter was presented and put upon its first reading.

A resolution asking that a committee of three be appointed to confer with a committee from the Morris Canal Company for the purpose of negotiating for the purchase of so much of the canal as lies within the city limits, was passed and the Committee was appointed as follows: Mayor [illegible], President of the Board, and Messrs. [illegible].

Memorial Service of Rev. George N. Cobb—Addresses by Bishop Janes and others.

The third day of the Danville Camp-meeting opened with unusual and increasing interest. Rev. J. H. FINNEMORE, of Pittsburgh, preached in the morning, R. M. WILLIAMS, of Springfield, in the afternoon, and in the evening Rev. B. KELLY, of Belvidere. A deep religious interest prevailed. On Thursday evening the people began to come in, in anticipation of the memorial service of Rev. Cobb, and more people came upon the ground than could be comfortably accommodated in the tents. Yesterday morning the cars brought thousands of strangers to the ground until the grounds were almost filled. The preliminary meetings held at 8 and 9 o'clock were led by Rev. Dr. FOSTER, one of the oldest and most prominent members of the Conference, preached, and after the preaching two or three short addresses or exhortations were delivered by ministers present, and a large prayer-meeting was held in front of the stand. During the morning a number of distinguished Methodist ministers, who were expected to be upon the ground, among the number Bishop JAMES, Rev. Dr. FOSTER, of New-York, and Rev. A. ATWOOD, of Philadelphia, after the morning service the preachers' stand was tastefully draped with mourning, in memory of the departed, with six heavy folds. At 7½ o'clock the meeting in memory of Rev. George N. Cobb was opened by Mr. COBB had long been a resident of Morristown, and was highly respected and loved by the people of the surrounding country, and universal interest and feeling was manifested. He had been a noble worker in the cause of Methodism, laboring the Church not only with his money, but doing his work with head and heart. The first speaker was Bishop JAMES. He spoke of Mr. COBB's noble work. He said that he had not only given largely of his means to the Church, for to him Morristown is indebted for her handsomest church, but he was one of the most in the State, and had always found sufficient leisure from the demands of his business business to give his time to the interests of the Church. His life in the beginning had been one of difficulties, but as he prospered he relaxed in his efforts, because none the less real or earnest, but only better able to advance the interests of Christianity. Unlike many others, his gifts and his work had been one of life; he had not left his work to be done by his heirs, but he himself has passed and directed it, and it is and only here for good. His life had been an example for all Christian men.

Bishop JAMES was followed by Rev. A. ATWOOD, one of the oldest men in the Methodist church, in some appropriate remarks. Dr. FOSTER presided, and had charge of the meeting during the day, and in the evening the sermon was delivered by Prof. H. A. BUTTZ, of Drew Theological Seminary, at Madison.

THE NINTH REGIMENT.

Preparations for the Encampment—Scenes Last Night at the Armory.

Today the Ninth Regiment, N. G. S. N. Y., will leave its armory, in Twenty-sixth-street, on route for Long Branch, where it will remain six days' encampment. The prospects of the encampment and amusement are as far very fine, for there will be fully 500 men in line, making the aggregate strength of the battalion, with the band, drum corps, and officers, fully 600. Every man will be thoroughly equipped in heavy marching order and full uniform, and the appearance of the command as it proceeds down-town will, no doubt, be a gratifying one, as the Board of Officers have worked assiduously to that end.

The regiment will assemble at 8 o'clock, and take up the line of march for Murray-street at 8½ o'clock, in order to take the steamer at Pier No. 1 at 11 o'clock the family fleet. And the advent of the regiment will, no doubt, attract considerable attention from the citizens.

The scenes at the armory last night were quite interesting, for the busy note of preparation was everywhere noticeable. Men were engaged in packing knapsacks, rolling blankets, or in their uniforms, drawing equipments and getting ready generally. It was easy to see that the boys meant business, and had fully concluded with Col. FISK's views relative to the encampment. The Colonel made a brief speech on Thursday evening, when the command was formed, and he then informed the members that the "camp was to be a camp of instruction," but that all the details and minutiae of venery would be strictly carried out. If any of the men supposed they were going merely for fun and pleasure, they were very much mistaken, and those holding such ideas had better not go at all. The encampment was intended for the benefit of the regiment, and those who thought they knew it all could stay at home.

Serious Fire in Eighth-Avenue.

Last evening a fire occurred in the smoke-house in the rear of the packing-house of ALFRED S. SPAULDING, No. 266 West Twenty-ninth-street, doing a damage of $5,000 to stock and $2,000 to building. The stock was insured in the Home, $11,000; Standard, $5,000; Firemen's, $3,000; Humboldt, $2,000; Manhattan, $2,000; Continental, $5,000; Importers and Traders', $3,000; and Citizens', $3,000. The buildings are insured for $25,000 in various companies. The origin of the fire has not yet been ascertained.

The Crop—A Cheering Account from New-England.

The Springfield Republican of the 17th inst. says: "Refreshing showers have visited nearly all parts of New-England and the Middle States within the last week, and though the fail of rain has been much less than was needed, it has brightened up vegetation wonderfully, and correspondingly encouraged the hearts of farmers, who hope for more rain, now that the spell is broken. The relief comes too late to save the tobacco, corn and potatoes, in many places in New England, but if we can have wet enough to start a good 'fall feed' for stock, the farmers will be able to get along comfortably. Altogether we have no scruples in affirming that the agricultural products of the country, taken as a whole, will exceed the yield of any preceding year. The flattering indications of the early Spring will not be fulfilled in all respects. Dry weather, floods, insects and blights have prevailed in different localities, and must always be expected to prevail in a country so extensive as ours. The hay and grain crops have proved, and the potato crop will prove, lighter in many sections than was expected. But taking the country through, the year has been one of average success for the farmers, and the yield of the fruits of the earth is such as to grandly fulfill the promise that 'while the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest shall not cease.' It is a noticeable fact, that in many places whence issued doleful accounts, before the wheat and other small grains were harvested, of damage by drouth, short straw, small heads of grain, &c., it has now been acknowledged that the yield was excellent. This is always the case in a dry year. The growth of straw is less than in a wet season, but the berry of the grain grows much larger and plumper, and the product of threshed grain often exceeds expectations."

The Fire-Bump Explosion at Scranton, Penn.—Eight Men Seriously Injured.

The Scranton Republican of the 18th inst. gives the following additional particulars of the fire-damp explosion in the shaft of the Roaring Brook Coal Company, at Dunmore: The only men in the shaft at the time were ten rockmen, who were engaged at the middle vein, blasting down rock. It appears that the men had heard some unusual noise, and continued to take the precaution against accidents by a long pole, never finding any damp; finally abandoned it, on Tuesday evening, when the men left their work, there was no appearance of damp, and they consequently went to work yesterday morning, with confidence; but when the foremen of the gang went down the new Bidder shaft for the day, the damp caught fire from his lamp, and eight of the men were more or less severely injured. The following are the names of the men: JOSEPH GREGGS, very badly, and will possibly not survive; CHRIS. GEORGE WILKINS, severely, but not fatally; JOHN HOSKINS, JAMES HOWELLS, WILLIAM BEBB, ANTHONY THOMAS, JOHN BONNER, and ISAAC HALLOWAY, not dangerously. The blame for this accident probably falls upon the man who abandoned the use of the safety lamp, and we should think that the numerous accidents occurring continually would awaken the miners to a sense of the risk to which they are continually exposing themselves by neglecting the safety lamps. The two men who escaped uninjured owe their preservation to their presence of mind by throwing themselves immediately upon the ground which they discovered the danger.

About 11 o'clock on Thursday night an accident, that may possibly prove fatal, occurred at No. 97 Gold-street. At that point there are two large tenement-houses, separated by two or three platforms from each story. At the one named Mrs. MARY HURLEY and Mrs. BRIDGET MCNEILY, residents on the premises, were standing on the second-story bridge, when suddenly it gave way, precipitating them 20 feet to the ground a distance of about thirty feet, injuring them severely about the head and spine. The husband of Mrs. MCNEILY, hearing the crash, thus occasioned, rushed out to see what was wrong, but not observing that the bridge was gone, he also fell to the ground and sustained injuries of an internal character, which the attending physician thinks will prove fatal.

LONG-ISLAND.

During the past week, whenever the boats of the East River Ferry Company (Hunter's Point and James' Slip) have approached the New-York shore, between Fourth-street and Twentieth-street, small boys and young men have amused themselves by throwing stones at the ferry-boats. Many of the stones are of a size large enough to do great damage should any person be hit by them. During certain stages of the tide the route taken by the boats is necessarily near the shore; but of late, for fear of these stone-showers, which do great damage to the boat as well as endanger the passengers, the boats have been compelled to take the centre of the river, and stem the great force of the tide. Superintendent SPRAR has notified the Police authorities, but it seems to made no difference. On Tuesday, a stone, weighing as much as two pounds, came crashing through a window, not two inches from the head of a lady.

Justice KELLUM, of Hempstead, sentenced JOHN MULGAHAN, a few days since, to the County Jail, and also to pay a fine of $50. MULGAHAN has repeatedly, in a most shocking and cruel manner, beat and ill-used his wife, and on the night in question, after another brutal experiment on the poor woman, and while she was in a bruised and bleeding condition, at the hour of midnight, with only partial covering on her person, he turned her out of doors.

The peach crop on Long Island is reported to be very large, and the fruit in fine condition.

Since opposition has been made to the filling in of sunken lots with the street refuse in New-York, the New-York street contractors have been hurrying their stuff over to Long Island City. The matter was brought to the notice of the Newtown Health Board some weeks since, and at that time the contractors promised to use a disinfectant. A large quantity of carbolic acid was procured and sprinkled over the refuse, and for a time it seemed evidently to have checked the animal matter which is found mixed in with the refuse, but as the space filled in enlarges and the number of cows from New-York increases, the man who sprinkles the dump loses control, and yesterday the smell was strong as ever. Nothing short of a steady sprinkler with an unlimited supply of carbolic acid would now stop the stench which is arising from the place. The passengers on the railroad lines terminating at Hunter's Point perceive the smell fully two miles east of Long Island City. The residents of Hunter's Point and Dutch Kills were compelled to close their doors and windows all day yesterday, and then the terrible pestiferous odor would still creep into the cracks and crevices of the houses. It was tasted in the food and drink, and felt in one's clothes. Now that the new city Health Board is fully organized it is asked, why this matter is not taken hold of and disposed of? Is the Board interested in the contract of filling the flats?

The Trenton Common Council on Thursday night elected all the city officers. Messrs. Much feeling is manifested in the matter, and it is intimated that the Justices are by law compelled to take cognizance of such complaints.

The colored voters of the Thirteenth Ward in Newark held a meeting Thursday night and avowed their determination to stand by the party which had lifted them from their former obscurity to dignity and power. There are said to be 160 colored voters in that ward alone. Enough to turn the scale in a municipal election.

The body found in the Passaic River, near Warren-street, Newark, was, yesterday, drawn out of the water by the wagon for his father, as is his custom, and when going down New-street, he accidently dropped the reins, and as he attempted to jump from the wagon to recover them, fell under the wheels of the wagon, passing a child not ridden, went to his assistance, and found that the wheels had passed over his legs and his breast, probably fatally injuring him. He was taken to his home.
